HOT READING FOR A COLD WINTER'S NIGHT

HE AIN'T HEAVY, HE'S MY LOVER.

by
CARLO CARLUCCI

HE AIN'T HEAVY, HE'S MY LOVER by Carlo Carlucci

Had enough of whips, chains and heavy-duty SM? You won't escape them here—but you'll rediscover them with a decidedly humorous twist, along with Carlo Carlucci's glowingly humorous look at every other aspect of gay life, from the pangs of coming out to a Thurberesque cartoon series "War Between the Machos and the Sisses" that will have you in stitches!

Gay cartoon books have come and gone, but this one is really special. "A must-have cartoon book," says the Baltimore Gay Paper; "A sharper wit could not be found!" Cruise magazine says it's "the kind of book you'll read over and over, getting a fresh chuckle or grin each time." And the San Francisco Review of Books declares that Carlo Carlucci "has the talent of Thurber."

THE BRIG by Mason Powell

A major novel of military discipline and institutionalized SM. Victor Terry in DungeonMaster calls it "one of the best erotic novels of dominance and submission I have ever read... This book is hot!"

Set at the close of the Vietnam War, The Brig chronicles a young conscientious objector's ordeal at the hands of his Marine tormentors, his surprising self-discoveries in the midst of torment, his ultimate triumph—and the price he pays for it.

MISTER BENSON THE COMPLETE NOVEL

MISTER BENSON by John Preston

The novel that electrified leathermen across the country when it was first serialized in Drummer, revised by the author with an epilogue from Mr. Benson himself. Cited by Penthouse as one of the Top Ten SM Novels ever written, praised by Phil Andros as "an SM masterwork," and acknowledged "a classic underground novel" by the Village Voice, John Preston's Mr. Benson is must reading for all leathermen, and for anyone who wants to understand the phenomenon of gay SM in the 1980s.

SLAVES OF THE EMPIRE

SLAVES OF THE EMPIRE by Aaron Travis

Hot off the press—the long-awaited paperback edition of Aaron Travis' SM Roman epic, with twelve richly detailed illustrations by the master of erotic fantasy art, Cavelo.

Set against the barbaric splendor of ancient Rome at the height of its empire, Slaves seduces the reader into a steamy world of flesh and steel, where a famed gladiator must ultimately choose between his own brutal nature and his love for a pair of twin-princes, while a sadistic senator plots to enslave them all.

John Preston calls Slaves of the Empire "a wonderful mythic tale," and Phil Andros has called it "taut, tense and absorbing."

"With hardly a pause," says the Bay Area Reporter, "Aaron Travis torments us from sex scene to sex scene, each building higher than the one before, all satisfying, original and leading surely to the hair-raising last chapter... I got bruises just from reading."

CAUTION: Every decision a person makes, including the decision to get out of bed in the morning, has some degree of risk associated with it. We strongly believe that each competent adult must set for themselves the level of risk he or she is willing to accept. Some avoid crossing streets in heavy traffic—others stunt-ride motorcycles without a helmet. However, to intelligently confront and accept risk, a person must understand the dangers. While Drummer hopes to educate its readers on a wide variety of topics, its main purpose is to entertain! Works of fiction presented in this magazine are just that—fiction! They are not in any way intended to suggest or describe activities that anyone should—or often could—actually do. They are meant for entertainment only.

In other than fictional pieces we will emphasize safe sex with respect to contagious diseases and safe and sane behavior with respect to all activities, and will try to point out all activities which deviate from generally recognized safe-sex and safe-and-sane play activities. ## Letters, Letters...

See Malecall; my response to some letters should be considered a part of this editorial.

The news on censorship is getting worse and worse. We hear that the powers-that-be at the two largest gay periodical publishing businesses in this country have met to plan how to tone down their publications. We hear that Washington state, one of the most liberal in the country, has again begun enforcing an old law directed against S/M and bondage erotica. Several bookstores have been involved and trials are pending. We also hear that federal and state agencies have targeted Washington, Oregon and Idaho for a test crackdown.

I'm happy to get your letters, even when they are critical—but what I'd like better is getting copies of your letters to senators, congressmen, etc. about the growing censorship. Fight it now!

Whose Purse Is On Fire?

As a lapsed Roman Catholic, I have been fully neutral about religion for years. Those who need it are welcome to it. The growing visibility of the bigots on the religious right has been bad enough—but now the Catholic church has decided to jump on the bandwagon. They have decided it is no longer OK to be gay as long as you remain celibate. Now you are condemned for recognizing and defending your homosexuality—whether you practice it or not! This from the institution that brought you the Inquisition.

T.R. Witomski is circulating a letter calling for all gays and friends of gays to write Pope John Paul II, Vatican City, Italy, and say he is not welcome in this country. (He is scheduled for a tour of the U.S. soon.) I agree—Write!

What Turns You On?

What is it about a photo of a hunk that turns you on—a look? A pose? A body type? A piece of clothing? Write to Fetish Foto and let us know. Each issue we will select one request and try to give the reader what he asked for. I like a hairy stud lying back with arms up and pits exposed, legs spread and cock and balls vulnerable, and a look of fear or defiance on his face. What is your particular turn-on?

Try to keep your requests simple. If you want a blond, hairy-chested hunk with eight inches and a lion tattoo on his right thigh wearing a pith helmet and bending over to lick his foot, it may take us years to set it up. But if all you want is a blond hunk licking his foot, the request becomes much more likely to be filled.

Let us hear from you and watch for the first Fetish Foto soon... It could be yours!

A Hand in the Pocket—A Kick in the Ass

The Catholic Church, the Salvation Army, many local United Funds, and others regularly ask for our donations, but they deny us any recognition and fight us when we try to improve our circumstances. Let them know how you feel. I wish every organization in this country would type up, or print up, or have made, small tickets or tokens like the sample here—something to drop in every Salvation Army kettle, church collection plate, etc. Feel free to make copies of this one and use them this season!

This could have been a donation. BUT... since your organization actively opposes the granting of equal rights to gay men and lesbian women, my donations will go elsewhere!

HENRY ROMANOWSKI

Several years ago Henry was encouraged by the Mine-shaft to be its representative for the International Mr. Leather Contest in Chicago. Although a terrific selection, Henry at that time was still a little shy (that look of shyness still remains at times and is very engaging). Despite apprehensions because of career and concerns about privacy, he did compete and became one of the finalists. That was the year in which contestants with more competition experience seemed to be the winners, but Henry decided he enjoyed the excitement, and his lover of many years provided support and encouragement. Henry thus spent some time cultivating stage presence—his body already long at competition standards—and in 1984 he became the winner of the Mr. New York Leather contest. After representing the title successfully, he became increasingly involved and is now one of the coproducers of the event.

Henry's ability to add the time and energy necessary for the production of a major leather event is just one aspect of his many interests and enthusiasms. A New Yorker of nine years, Henry is originally from Florida. Trained as a specialty baker, he rapidly became the manager of an exclusive chocolatier establishment after coming to New York. He describes first seeing and wishing he could meet Fred, his lover of eight years, on the New York subways. They later met by chance at a restaurant and Fred introduced Henry to his first true SM experiences. This compatibility was only one aspect of their many mutually shared interests. Four years ago they combined their areas of expertise into a new business venture which has continually increased in success. They discovered that they enjoyed working together and spending much of the day in each other's company.

Even after eight years, contrary to what seems to be a frequent stereotype about leather/SM relationships ending after the couple discover tender feelings for one another,

Fred and Henry realize an increase of sexual excitement, business success and ever-growing affection and companionship. When their business developed to a point of opening another store which necessitated them spending time from one another, they felt a true sense of loss.

Henry has become an increasingly prominent figure in the leather community.

He described his excitement at seeing himself on the cover of New York Native after winning the title but was too embarrassed to actually purchase a copy. Fred and Henry both remain quite private and rarely appear in the New York bar scene.

They are, however, a stellar duo at many leather-world functions and have appeared frequently in DungeonMaster, Drummer, and Zeus photo essays, and the CHC Inferno run books.

Both Fledermaus and I have been happy and privileged to have Fred and Henry as increasingly close friends, and hope it continues many years.

THE EARLY YEARS

PART II

WRITERS

Robert Payne, Jeanne Barney, Jack Fritscher and John Rowberry have already been discussed in the Editors' section of the first part of this article (Drummer 100). Jeanne and Jack were very important contributors to Drummer during their tenures as editors, and the other two have been important contributors for nearly the full life of the magazine.

Nonfiction came from a variety of contributors including Robert Opel, who wrote the name that needs extra-special mention is Allen Eagles, whose Movie Mayhem series was an absolute delight. His selection of movie stills of hunky (and sometimes not-so-hunky) actors usually stripped to the waist and tied up, ready to be flogged or tortured for the titillation of movie audiences, was wonderful. And his accompanying text was a delight to read. He fully appreciated well-done or even only adequately done shots, and openly ridiculed those poorly done. The main Movie May-

"Leather Casting Couch" (issues 12-14); G.B. Misa's "S&M Gym" (issues 14-28); Frank O'Rourke's "Prison Punk" (issues 27-32) and "Captain Morgan" (issues 51 and 52); Orlando Paris' "Seventy-Thirds and Eighty-Eights, Good Buddy" (issue 15); John Preston's Mr. Benson (issues 29-38) and "I Once Had a Master" (issue 38); Houston Smith's "Trapped" (issues 18-21) and Hank Trout's "Great Wrestling Match" (issue 36). These are the most memorable of an excellent collection of fiction contributions, but there are two others that require even more specific mention.

Jason Klein's first work to appear was "Thomas in the Pit" in the first issue of Mach and quickly followed with "Bottom" in Mach 2, "Slaves," in Drummer 35, "Broken Moments" in Drummer 36, "Sticks and Stones" in Drummer 42, "The Final Solution," in Drummer 44, "Animal," in Drummer 45 and "Cowboy," in Drummer 50. (His how-to article on crucifixion, "When in Rome," appeared in DungeonMaster 11.) Jason's unique style was startling; his stories revealed remarkable insight and at the same time were wildly erotic. When I first read Jason's work, I thought it was all wildly marvelous fantasy. But after meeting him in 1980 at the Fifteen's Scene Four at the Russian River, I learned that it was instead a biography—elaborated and embroidered, and sometimes with a lot of wishful thinking—but definitely biographical. The events of Scene Four are included in "The Final Solution" in Drummer 44 (I am "Blazing Tony, Shiek of a Thousand Competent Tortures, Crusher of Little Men, and Uprooter of Helpless Tongues...").

Drummer 44 is an important Drummer milestone in many ways. It was the first issue in which slick paper virtually disappeared from the magazine, and the dimensions were reduced by a fraction of an inch. These changes were driven home to Drummer subscribers by the mailing of Drummer 43 (a much larger and slicker magazine) and Drummer 44 in the same envelope—certainly a milestone in bad public relations! But no matter what paper it is printed on, Drummer 44 contains what is probably the most important story Drummer has ever published: Aaron Travis' "Blue Light." I do not find this a JO story, but it is very erotic. It is also, very simply, one of the best pieces of gay fiction ever penned. This is not just my opinion—but that of many respected authors, editors, critics and other literary types across the country. Aaron Travis' other stories in Drummer (issues 33, 46-48, 53-56, 69, etc.) and Mach (issues 1, 2 and 3) are excellent. I recently discovered the one-page "Steel" in Drummer 33 and loved its originality and intensity—but "Blue Light" is a masterpiece!

Larry Townsend is a name long associated with leather lifestyles, and very familiar to Drummer readers. When researching these articles, I was surprised to discover that his association with Drummer is relatively recent. His column Leather Notebook began in Drummer 38 and his first fiction to appear in the magazine was a reprint of Run No More in issues 41 through 51. Other reprints and excerpts appeared in later issues, but "Board of Inquiry" in Drummer 100 and this issue is only the second piece of original fiction from him to be first published in Drummer.

The Ten Commandments, starring Charlton Heston.

about bars and events; Fred Halsted, who wrote on a variety of topics; Frank Edwards, who reviewed movies, etc.; and Toby Borh and Bernie Prock, who wrote the "Leather Journal." Particularly important are many of the fetish and/or historical pieces in the early issues—unfortunately, almost all of these have no author cited. Jack Fritscher was a significant contributor of fetish pieces during his tenure as was previously mentioned; John Rowberry was a significant contributor of reviews.

In the nonfiction category, hem articles are in issues 8 through 14. Scattered shorter pieces appeared before and after these.

In the earliest issues much of the fiction was reprinted from other sources, including Kurt Kreisler's My Brother, My Slave, Robert Payne's Story of Q and George Birimsa's Pogey Bait. The following stories are ones I consider important in Drummer's development and growth: Phil Andros' "Babysitter," and "Many Happy Returns" in Drummer 8; Scott Master's "Five in the Training Room" (issues 3-10) and

ROBERT OPEL

PHOTOGRAPHERS

The work of staff photographers was reviewed on pages 47-54 of Drummer 100, and other contributing photographers are included here. Since "a photo is worth a thousand words," I'm going to add only a few more about photographers and leave more room for their photographs to speak. Some of the contributors are represented by reprinted photos and others by new work.

Robert Opel was an early contributor of photos and articles to Drummer—but he soon became known best for his unusual photos with a touch of humor. His photos often graced Drummer's "In Passing" page. He was shot and killed by bandits who invaded his gallery in July of 1979. He was memorialized on the "In Passing" page of Drummer 31 with a photo of him by Jim Stewart and a paragraph written by Opel, which began: "I am Robert Opel. I am an artist, a cocksucker, and an anarchist. My life is my art. Sometimes I use a camera..."

The men of Zeus have often appeared in Drummer and will continue to be featured prominently. Zeus men are, almost without exception, also Drummer men.

Target Studios also regularly featured Drummer-type men, and their work was included in Drummer's first issue and often appeared in later issues of the magazine. It was a loss when Target went out of business.

Jim Moss has had more photos on the cover of Drummer than any other photographer—and he will soon have another. He is currently working on a special project for Drummer 103 featuring men of Texas as they celebrate their state's sesquicentennial. □

Kudzu

by Aaron Travis

Kudzu spooks me.

Kudzu is a Japanese vine. Kudzu is a monster. Plant it in a hot, humid environment, and it takes over everything. Its tendrils sprout a dense leafy cover that spreads in all directions, spiraling up tree trunks, slithering like snakes through the underbrush, spanning bayous and swampland, choking the life out of weaker plants, blotting out the sun. Kudzu turns forest into jungle. Kudzu cannot be stopped.

You see a lot of it in Louisiana. For some reason, long ago, the locals imported the stuff and planted it everywhere; to fight erosion, I think. Now they fight the kudzu. It's a losing battle.

Like a dense jungle wall, Kudzu lines long stretches of U.S. 20, the derelict highway that runs west to east across the top of Louisiana. On the highway there is air, light, a sense of final destination somewhere ahead. On either side is the kudzu jungle, as deep and impenetrable as a tropical rain forest. Anything at all might be lurking in that mass of shadowy foliage. A whole other world might exist beyond its green border, only a few yards beyond the asphalt and the few cars that occasionally zip across its surface, their passengers eager to leave the kudzu behind.

I've taken that stretch of highway every summer on for five years, on the long drive from Oregon to Florida and back. I've never enjoyed it. Like I said: Kudzu spooks me.

So does the South. I don't mean the genteel border states, or the balmy coastal stretches, but the deep South. The South of good ol' boys and phony manners hiding a distrust of every stranger passing through. The South of shanty towns and crumbling antebellum mansions, weeping mimosa and salamanders slithering through the grass, of the long hot summer and humidity like a steam bath. The South where kudzu thrives and spreads like a green tumor.

That sweltering morning, last summer, I had a more immediate discomfort to distract me from thoughts of the world that lay beyond the kudzu. I had to piss. Only a little at first—the result of two cups of rancid coffee at the little motel in Shreveport—but then more and more. I drove through a couple of squalid little towns along the highway, but something about the look of the run-down filling stations and the even more run-down good ol' boys manning the pumps made me pass them by. I was looking for a rest stop along the highway, but no such convenience seemed to have occurred to whoever built and maintained this wretched stretch of asphalt. Or maybe the kudzu had overgrown the rest stops long ago, reclaiming them like the jungle reclaims ancient Mayan cities down in Yucatan.

The highway had long ago narrowed to two lanes, and then narrowed even more, until there wasn't even a shoulder to pull off on. Then I came to a spot where the wall of kudzu retreated a few feet, just enough to let me pull safely off the road, out of the line of traffic, though I hadn't passed another car for miles.

I stepped off the gritty, broken edge of asphalt and onto a moist carpet of grass. And then, taking a breath, into the kudzu. The vines closed behind me like a heavy curtain silently falling shut, leaving the air and sunlight behind.

A few more steps, and I was hidden completely from the road. I leaned against the moldering bark of a stunted tree, unzipped my jeans, pulled out my cock. I took a quick look around. Nothing to see, except tendrils of kudzu glimpsed through a maze of kudzu, going on forever, ending in a darkness even deeper than the one surrounding me. Nothing to hear, except an occasional bird cry muffled by the foliage, and a faint, steady hissing like steam, the lazy hot breath of the jungle. Then a louder hissing as the flow finally came, splashing against a moldy root at my feet, sending a salamander skittering away in surprise.

The utter stillness, the isolation, the claustrophobia were anything but soothing. The place unnerved me, had me peering into the gloom and jerking my head like a sparrow watching for a cat. Crazy, I said to myself. Paranoid. Which was why, when I heard him moaning, I thought at first that I must be imagining it.

I squeezed my cock at the base to check the flow, stood stock-still and listened. The sound, whatever it was, died away in the silence. I started pissing again, eager to get it over, anxious to get back to my car—and then, as if the sound of my pissing was a cue, the moaning returned.

Something drew up inside me; the piss stopped on its own. I turned my head toward the sound. Not my imagination. Real. And human. And somewhere close by—the sound of someone moaning softly through the dense curtain of kudzu.

I shoved my cock into my pants and zipped up. My first step was back toward the highway. Then the moaning returned, shaped now into a definite voice. A man's voice; too low to be a woman's. More a groan than a moan. There was fear in it. Maybe pleading. Maybe pain. Like an animal's pain, too deep to be put into words. A chilly patch of gooseflesh crinkled at the back of my neck and slithered down my spine.

I bowed low and peered into the underbrush, unable to see anything beyond the kudzu. The moaning continued, growing louder than before and more desperate. Slowly, slowly I reached out and separated the tendrils of kudzu with the back of my hands and stepped deeper into the jungle. Curtain after curtain blocked my way, and as I stepped through each one the moaning grew closer.

I caught a glimpse of sunlight—a clearing up ahead. I stopped, tilted my head and caught a glimpse, lost in an instant, of what lay in the clearing. I sucked in my breath—and thought again that I must be imagining it. Then I heard the moaning again, very close, and knew that what I had seen was real.

I could have returned to the car. I could have turned and run—or better yet walked, because running I would have tripped over the vines and roots—and left the clearing behind forever, telling myself I was crazy, seeing things, hearing things, telling myself it was none of my business anyway. Instead I took a deep breath and pushed onward through the kudzu.

One instant I was surrounded by the choking green vines, still safe in the darkness. Then I was clear of it, blinded by a shaft of noonday sunlight boring down through a hole in the ceiling of the jungle. I covered my eyes with the back of my hand for a moment, squinting. Then I dropped my hand and saw him. Saw what I had glimpsed a moment before through the heavy lace of kudzu.

His back was toward me; I couldn't see his face. He stood upright, his body splayed in the shape of an X. That was what I saw and took in in an instant: the body of a young man, nude and slick with sweat, spread-eagled upright and bound in the narrow space between two trees, shivering and moaning in the hot sunlight.

His wrists were pulled wide apart and high above his head, bound by metal handcuffs to two thin but sturdy branches. His feet were pulled even wider apart, each ankle circled by a handcuff, the matching cuffs clamped around gnarly roots at the base of the trees on either side. He seemed to hang that way rather than stand, his feet barely touching the ground, his toes straining downward like grasping fingers, clutching at the slippery surface of the moldering roots.

The mind sees more than the eyes alone. I hadn't yet seen his face, but I knew he was young—from the slightness of his frame, lean and wiry. From the tautness of the flesh that padded his shoulder and the hard, flexed muscles of his naked buttocks. From the satiny smoothness of his skin, glowing with a thin sheen of perspiration under the sunlight. The sweat glinted in the dimples of his ass and the crevice of his spine, like the glint of the handcuffs around his ankles and wrists.

I stepped forward. The sun-dried grass crackled under my boots. He must have heard the sound; he jerked. The contorted muscles of his arms and legs drew slightly tauter, straining at the handcuffs, his bowed head snapped upright for an instant, giving me a glimpse of the ragged shock of black hair that curled onto his neck. Something else, blacker than his hair, was wrapped tight around his head—a blindfold. He moaned again, then dropped his head. His body went slack, hanging naked and crucified between the trees.

I stepped closer. I could smell his sweat, carried like the scent of an animal on the sultry air, mixed with the smells of moldering bark and the steam rising from the kudzu. He sensed me drawing nearer; the moans took shape. No—Please—No. And other sounds, not quite words, desperate and pleading.

His skin was very firm and very pale, skin that hadn't seen the sun for a long, long time. Against his pale flesh the marks showed very clearly. Broad red stripes, like the marks of a belt, crisscrossing his shoulders and buttocks and the backs of his legs. Some were dark and fresh, others faded to a pink blush. Mixed with the belt marks was a fine hatching of thin welts, like spidery pencil marks, delivered by something harder and thinner than a belt.

His hips were tilted slightly back, his thighs wrenched so far apart that no shadow obscured the crevice between his cheeks. The most secret part of his body was completely exposed and vulnerable. The stripes and welts were concentrated there, at the opening between his buttocks, crossing and recrossing in a crowded hatchwork with his asshole at the very center.

The hole itself was puffy and swollen, like a bee sting turned inside-out and protruding in a slick pink nub, beaded with moisture and etched with tiny welts. A twig suddenly cracked beneath my foot. He moaned again and as I watched, fascinated and appalled, the hole began to twitch as if I had touched it with a live wire, dilating and snapping shut in a strange spastic rhythm.

Then I looked down and saw the rubbers. Twenty of them at least, maybe more, strewn haphazardly on the ground between his feet. Sheepskin condoms, the kind that give most men a loose fit, stretched like overblown balloons. Some were old and dry. Some were new enough to still be filled with semen and glistening with lubricant.

I drew back, staring at his naked ass. At the used condoms strewn on the ground. At the muscles that undulated across his back as he strained at the handcuffs and then fell limp again. If he was still moaning, I didn't hear. My heartbeat was pounding too loud in my temples.

I stepped around the trees, brushing against the kudzu, keeping my eyes on his body. I saw the clamps first. Tiny silver alligator clamps glinting in the sun, pinned to his nipples, pinching them flat and pulling them outward from his chest. His torso was hard and lean and hairless, the flat, square muscles of his pectorals and the ridges above his navel pulled into stark relief by the pressure on his arms and legs.

His cock hung large and fleshy between his legs, red and swollen. A thin leather strap was tied tightly around the base. Another strap was wound around the top of his testicles, forcing them downward into the sack, packing them into a hard red ball. I had never seen anything like it. But it was the sight of the clamps that made me suck in my breath.

The end of his big cock bristled like a porcupine's tail. A dozen alligator clamps were mounted around the head, biting into the fleshy ridge of the crown. One clamp hung from the end, its outermost set of teeth biting into the very tip of his penis, puckering the slit and pinching it shut.

I think he must have sensed that I was standing in front of him. I think that was why he started to beg. His words were garbled and indistinct, running together, interrupted by moans and shudders that made him shake all over. His voice was a whine, pathetic, close to crying, like the voice of a person used to begging.

"Please, don't hurt me anymore, Lucas. Please. Don't hurt me, sir..."

I looked up at his face. A handsome face. I could tell, despite the blindfold. High cheekbones, a broad nose, a wide mouth with thick red lips. Skin like peaches and cream, except for the bruises. Handsome, and quite young; the stubble across his jaw was sparse in places, like a beard that's only recently begun to grow in. His hair was thick and black, and badly cut. No barber had given him that cut. An amateur using blunt scissors had been tending to his grooming for quite some time.

"Please—take me down. Please. I won't try to run away anymore. Honest. It's just—sometimes I get so scared down in the basement. It's dark, I get scared... and Jimmy Jack is so mean sometimes..."

I was paralyzed, listening to him, staring at him, watching his slender chest rise and fall. Finally I reached up, hardly thinking, and took the clamp from one of his nipples. I meant it as a favor—to take away the pain. But his reaction was something I could never have expected—hissing through clenched teeth, letting out a weird bleating noise of pain, his whole body convulsing in a rictus of agony. My jeans suddenly felt tight at the crotch, pinching into the flesh. That was when I first realized that I had a hard-on.

My cock was hard. Stiff from staring at his nude and tortured body. From watching his reaction as I pulled the steel clamp from his nipple. It scared me, and finally shocked me into thinking instead of just staring. I realized I had to get him down. But I couldn't see how. Without a saw to cut through the branches and roots. Without a key to unlock the handcuffs—

I turned and peered into the thick grass that blanketed the clearing, into the mounds of kudzu that pooled around its edges. There seemed to be nothing there, until I spotted the foot locker. A big metal box, olive green, mottled with rust, almost buried in a clump of vines. I dragged it into the clearing, surprised at how heavy it was. The hinges creaked as I pried the lid open. He must have recognized the sound; he began to whimper again. He must have known what was inside the box.

In the shallow top shelf there were more alligator clamps and another set of handcuffs—shiny and silver, regulation police issue. But no keys. I lifted the shelf and saw the rest of the contents. The things that had made the locker so heavy. The things that had made him groan.

A coiled bullwhip. A riding crop. A car antenna. A black leather dildo the size of a man's arm. A rubber ball attached to leather straps—some sort of gag. A dog collar and chains. Jars of lubricant and a box of condoms wrapped in cellophane. And wrapped in a stained and faded handkerchief, a billfold.

The billfold was thin and worn, molded to fit the curve of its owner's ass. There was no money in the sleeve, but as I unfolded it the rest of the contents spilled into my hands.

He was no Southern boy. I had realized that already from the sound of his voice. His driver's license said New Jersey. Slightly older than I had thought; old enough to be in college. His first name was Tony. His last name I can't remember, except that it was Italian. In the photo he was as handsome as I had thought. Grinning at the camera, eyes bright, his hair cut short and curly, a kid high on the thrill of getting his first driver's license.

There were more photos—parents, friends, family. Tony in swimsuit and goggles, poolside at some sort of athletic meet, his curly hair frazzled and damp, his lean body flushed and wet. Another photo of him, cute and smiling, with his arm around a pretty blond girl. There was a message written on the back in a fancy feminine hand: Tony—Don't forget me while you're cracking the books down at LSU! You know I'll always love you. And watch out for Smokey! XXX, Diane.

"Lucas? I'll suck you..."

I jerked my head—a reflex at being caught looking through another man's wallet. But Tony was exactly as he had been before, hanging naked between the trees, blindfolded. Still thinking I was someone else.

"Please. I'll suck your cock, sir." His voice was hoarse and thin, and oddly dreamlike, as if he were only half-conscious. "Just don't use the whip. Please. Don't use the dildo. Don't fuck my ass again, not now. Please. Take me down. Take me down and let me suck on it. You know I love to suck your big cock, sir. Let me suck it for you, please. Let me suck it till you come. Just don't fuck me again. Don't let Jimmy Jack use the car antenna on me..."

His voice suddenly cracked and rose to a desperate whine. He pulled against the handcuffs and rocked his torso, making his big limp cock swing between his legs. "Please take me down! I won't touch myself anymore. I won't try to escape again. Never! Please. Take me down so you can fuck my mouth. I'll make it feel real good. You can sit on my face. Please? I'll do it real good this time, not like before. Let me eat out your ass, okay? I'll use my tongue this time, I promise, just the way you like it. Please—"

There was a little wooden box that I hadn't spotted before, nestled in the bottom of the locker. I pulled it out and opened it, thinking it might contain a key.

Inside were more photographs. But these were not snapshots from a billfold. Polaroids, dozens of them, grainy black-and-whites lit by a stark flash. Interior shots, taken in some raw unfinished space like an attic or a basement. Photos of Tony. Always nude, always in some sort of bondage. On his knees with his arms behind him, his mouth plugged with the rubber gag, staring up in fear at the camera. Bent double across a sawhorse, his ankles and wrists chained to the legs on either side. Spread-eagled in a door frame, the big rubber dildo protruding from his welted ass, held in place by electrical tape.

Close-ups of his big, fleshy cock, bristling with alligator clamps. Close-ups of his chest, with more clamps mounted on his swollen nipples. Close-ups of his face, sweaty and bruised, his mouth screwed up, his eyes glittering with pain from something being done to his body out of camera range.

There was a whole series that showed him sucking cock. Two men were using him, taking turns—one using his mouth while the other snapped the camera. The men were never shown, except for their cocks and glimpses below the waist. Lucas. Jimmy Jack. Those were the names he kept using. One had a hard, washboard stomach and muscular thighs. The other was fat, with a big round belly. Both had big cocks, big enough to push Tony's chin down to his chest and make his throat bulge from his neck when they pushed in all the way. In the pictures Tony kissed their cocks, licked them with his tongue, opened his mouth wide and swallowed them whole. There was never a trace of lust on his face, only a desperate, pathetic willingness to please.

Dates had been written on the backs of some of the photos. The newest was less than two weeks old. The oldest had been taken almost a year before.

There was no key. No way I could take him down from the tree. But I could at least take the clamps off his body.

He heard my approach and tensed. I supposed I could have said something to soothe him. I could at least have let him know that I was an outsider, that he had nothing to fear, that I was going to help him. But I said nothing, letting him think what he would. Perhaps even then I knew how it was going to end...

I removed the clamp from his nipple as gently as I could. Even so, his reaction was as powerful as before—gasping, sucking in his chest, making his hard lean muscles undulate beneath the glaze of sweat. Making my cock stiffen even harder in my pants.

I took the clamps off his cock. I took my time—to be gentle, I thought, but also because I was hypnotized by his reaction. By his writhing. By his desperate, whimpering squeals. By the way his cock began to stiffen and grow erect as I plucked away the clamps one by one.

Before I was finished, his cock was fully erect, standing up red and bloated from his hips, unnaturally swollen by the strap tied tight around the base. It was then that I saw the spidery marks, like the marks on his back and ass, that crisscrossed the taut, translucent flesh. Someone had been using his hard cock for a whipping post.

There was one more clamp to go, the one attached to the very tip of his cock. As I reached down to remove it, something gave way inside me, gave in to his nudity and helplessness, to the quiet stillness of the kudzu broken by his pathetic moans, to the rigid feeling of power welling up inside my pants. I removed the clamp, but not gently. I took the prongs between my finger and thumb, paused, paused for a long moment, then yanked it away.

I watched him writhe. Listened to him shriek. Smelled the fresh sweat erupting from his pores. Then I put the clamp back on his cock.

That was when I knew I was going to fuck him.

I had never fucked a man before. A few times, over the years, I'd accepted a blowjob from a stranger in a men's room; that was long ago in my college days. Certainly I had never before done the things I did to Tony that day, not to anyone. The whole time I was doing it I knew that it was terribly wrong, that the things I did to him made me no better than the men who had captured him and held him captive. I should have left immediately, found the authorities, found some way of freeing him. And that was exactly what I intended to do, I kept telling myself. Just as soon as I was finished with him.

I was skittish as a cat the whole time, jerking at the least noise—knowing that someone might find us, that the two men in the photos might come back at any moment. But fear only seemed to fuel the sensation. My cock refused to go soft, even after the first time I came inside him and added another used rubber to the pile at his feet.

I remember pulling myself from his ass and staggering to the foot locker. I remember staring down at the pictures, at the dog collar and chains. I remember picking up the car antenna and turning to face him, knowing he had no way to anticipate what I was going to do next, and no way to resist.

The bullwhip. The dildo. The alligator clamps. I kept going back to the box, and Tony kept responding, kept twisting his hard, lean body into ever lewder and more desperate contortions. Kept pleading with me to take him down and let him suck my cock instead, which was the only thing I couldn't do. At some point I stuffed the rubber plug into his mouth, afraid that his squealing might be heard all the way to the highway.

There's no excuse for what I did. I can only say that it was a sort of drunkenness that came over me, fueled by the ferment of the kudzu and the leafy stillness, by the fearful odor of his body and the sight of his silky flesh glimmering with sweat in the sunlight. After I came the second time, the fever receded and the enormity of what I'd done came home to me. Suddenly I wanted no more of it. I only wanted to be far away.

That was when I heard it. A loud noise in the underbrush, like the sound of a man approaching through the kudzu. Later I realized that it must have been only a deer, or whatever large animal populates the kudzu. At the time I only knew that I had to escape. My pants were around my ankles. I turned and bolted, pulling them up as I ran through the foliage, squinting as the kudzu slapped my face, tripping and falling, scurrying up again, never stopping until I had reached my car and was somehow back on the highway gliding down the asphalt.

I drove until my heartbeat slowed to normal, not really seeing anything ahead of me, my mind still back in the clearing. What I had to do was obvious. I had to find the police. I would do it, I told myself, in the next town I came to. There was no reason not to. The blindfold had stayed on the whole time, I hadn't said a word; there was no way he could have known that it was me. There was nothing I could be punished for. I would simply tell it just the way it happened—the beginning and the end, at least. I had stopped to take a piss beside the road. I hear him moaning, found him hanging between the trees. Saw there was no way I could get him down. Heard a noise in the underbrush and ran—who wouldn't? Went back to my car and found the police as quickly as I could. Just like any decent citizen...

I hadn't been driving five minutes before I came to the rest stop. Even as rattled as I was, the irony struck me like a slap across the face. If I'd only kept driving for five more minutes, there would have been no need to stop alongside the road, and I would never have found him. Never have done the things I did...

As I pulled alongside the rest stop, I saw it—a police car, parked at one side. Like an omen. For an instant I thought of driving on, leaving it all behind me. But I did the right thing. I owed him that much.

The patrolman was sitting on the front bumper, quietly smoking a cigarette. A big, muscular man, his broad chest and shoulders filling out the lines of his tan uniform, his eyes hidden behind a pair of silver shades. He tossed the cigarette aside and stared as I pulled in alongside him, kept his eyes on me as I slowly opened the door and stepped onto the tarmac. He nodded as I approached, his lips curling downward into a frown. I saw myself reflected in his sunshades. The face of a man with a guilty secret.

"Afternoon," he said. His voice was gruff, almost hostile, with just a hint of a Southern twang. A suspicious voice—or maybe I was only imagining it.

I stood there for a moment, staring at myself in his glasses, wondering how to start. "I need some help, officer."

"Yeah?" His lips barely moved. His face seemed to be made of stone. "What's your problem, buddy?"

I opened my mouth, started to speak. Just then another cop emerged from the door to the men's room. A fat cop with a big overhanging gut, still busy adjusting his pants around his hips and buckling his belt. Wearing mirror shades, like his partner. Wearing the same hostile frown.

"What's up, Lucas?" The fat cop had a thin, high voice, glazed with a phony, sweet veneer.

"Don't know, Jimmy Jack. This fellow says he's got some kind of problem."

The fat cop finished buckling his belt and stood beside his partner. I stared at their faces, seeing only the four mirrored images of my face staring back at me. I glanced down and saw the handcuffs hanging from Lucas' belt, and the keys, dozens of keys, dangling from a big metal ring, the kind that jailers use.

I looked up again. In the mirrors I saw myself biting my lower lip. Saw the strange, cracked attempt at a smile that broke across my face.

"Oh... it's nothing, officers. Nothing at all, not really. I'm just a little spooked, that's all. Been driving too long, I guess. The heat. And the kudzu..."

"Sure." The cop called Jimmy Jack smiled and spat on the concrete. "Guess it's a pretty hot day for Yankee boy like you, huh? Maybe all you need's a nice cool glass of iced tea. There's a Dairy Queen a few miles up the road."

"Yeah." The muscular one, Lucas, slowly nodded. "Maybe you should just get back in your car and keep driving. Nothing to be afraid of in the kudzu. Is there, Jimmy Jack?"

"Shit no. Nothing at all." Jimmy Jack giggled. Lucas only smiled a little, the cold lines of his mouth turning slightly upward.

"Sure," I mumbled. "Sure. Thanks, officers." I stepped backward until my hand found the door handle and pulled it open. I slid into the seat, turned the key and backed out of the parking lot. In the rearview mirror I saw them watching me as I pulled onto the asphalt and gathered speed, until the road took a sudden dip and they disappeared behind a veil of kudzu. □

A FOUNDATION FOR TOM

The Internal Revenue Service has approved tax-exempt status for a Tom of Finland Foundation to preserve the work of the master of gay art.

The main purposes of the Tom of Finland Foundation are to acquire, preserve and prepare a collection of all his published work, and to document his influence. Tom has personally contributed nearly one hundred separate editions of his publications, approximately 600 photographs, and over one hundred original drawings.

Although Tom has been drawing since shortly after WWII, his work was first published in 1957 when it began regular appearance in Physique Pictorial.

The Foundation urges the owners of Tom's originals to consider contributing drawings or photographs. If an owner wants drawings to be permanently preserved, with or without credit to him, he should give serious consideration to making an eventual bequest. For more information about the Foundation and about how to make a gift or bequest, write to Tom of Finland Foundation, Inc., PO Box 26658, Los Angeles, CA 90026.

CHILDISH LAW

The Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders (GLAD) and the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts recently won an initial victory in their challenge to the Massachusetts foster-care policy which discriminates against lesbians, gays, single people and unmarried couples.

The court stated "If the best interests of the child are to govern...then any distinction between married couples and singles persons is wholly arbitrary and capricious and adverse to the needs of children," and found it "perplexing that the Department of Social Services, as plaintiffs alleged, approved the plaintiffs as foster parents, placed the children whose "emotional and physical condition improved dramatically," and acknowledged that the quality of care given was "exceptional," and now comes into court postulating that its preference for married couples is rationally related to a legitimate purpose." The court went on to state that "any exclusion of homosexuals from consideration as foster parents, all things being equal, is blatantly irrational."

LAST CHANCE FOR THE HOMO-MONUMENT

Dutch national and local governments have pledged funds for a monument for homosexuals. The C.O.C. (a Dutch gay organization) and Salhomo (the gay Jewish organization) have also raised funds, but a further Hfl 200,000 is needed before the end of the year, or the government funding is withdrawn. The monument is to commemorate the homosexuals murdered in the German concentration camps. Offers of help should be sent to C.O.C., Rozenstraat 14, Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

SUBTLE AND INSIDIOUS TACTICS

In the past, Barnes & Noble,

one of the country's largest book dealers, has carried a wide selection of good gay literature, but this material has been omitted from recent catalogs. The reason? Complaints from the far right against "books for queers."

T.R. Witomski has started a counter-campaign letter-writing blitz of his own. He's asking you to write to Barnes & Noble about the lack of gay material in their catalog, let them know that if you can't get gay books through their catalog, you will have to go elsewhere to do all your book buying. The freedom to read publications that touch our lives is one of our basic American rights, and we cannot allow these rights to be trampled. Send your letter to Barnes & Noble, 126 Fifth Ave., New York, NY 10011.

DRUG TESTING REJECTED

The California Assembly rejected a measure that would have required all 120 state legislators to take drug tests after a storm of criticism.

Jerald Hagstrom of Californians for Drug-Free Youth told the committee he felt there had been "a lot of levity"... "I'm talking about a disease," Hagstrom told the committee.

"And I'm talking about freedom, the United States and the Constitution," Assembly Labor and Employment Committee Chairman Richard Floyd snapped.

"I raise enough hell around here that I know the other side has checked my butt out from top to bottom," he said. "I'll be damned if you or Ms. La Follette is going to force a test on me, because I know me."

Assemblywoman Marian La Follette sponsored the bill and even brought a large plastic bag full of empty urine-sample bottles with her to the hearing.

Chairman Floyd had jabbed at the proposal and drew moans from onlookers by drinking yellow juice out of a container resembling a test tube.

WHO ARE THE HEROS?

In an article from Israel Today, Si Frunkin, advisor and past chairman of the Southern California Council for Soviet Jewry and a contributing editor of Israel Today, reflected on a Holocaust conference he attended where the conversation turned to Wallenberg and other Gentiles who hid and cared for Jews during WWII. His musings turn to whether he or other Jews would shelter homosexuals under similar circumstances.

"How many of us would take in a homosexual or a homosexual family group under these circumstances? They would have to be hidden from visitors, friends, the postman, the meter reader. They would not be able to pay rent or even help out with the cost of food—food that is rationed and scarce and yet has to be provided to feed these strangers while your own family gets less. They would probably stay with you forever, since there is no chance that our government or its policies would ever change (remember, for most of World War II it certainly looked like the Germans were winning. It was only when they started losing that the Germans and their generals began to dislike Hitler and tried to kill him; most of the rest of the time the Germans were crazy about Adolph).

"Anyway, how many of us would be willing to take in a homosexual family under circumstances I described? Not too many, especially since we would not be doing anything heroic, just unlawful, dangerous and stupid. You see, we would have no idea that the world would decide 40 years later, after most of us were dead, that what we did was herosim."

BOARD OF INQUIRY

PART II

by LARRY TOWNSEND

I was now more convinced than ever that someone had deliberately dropped this inquiry into my lap, in order to embarrass me. Yet the incident had happened outside my command, so the only way I could be faulted was in my handling of the hearing itself. I was saddled with an incompetent prosecutor, whom I personally disliked; nor did the defense advocate appear particularly gifted, and was certainly inexperienced. The incident itself was a crazy escapade that only a screwball midshipman might have perpetrated. He had violated any number of regulations, several of which were serious if anyone was willing to complain. Without a complaint, he had only breached a few minor rules: he had awakened a dozen men from deepsleep, and he had used a few pieces of equipment without authorization. He had apparently not seriously injured anyone, and the superficial wounds he had inflicted on his victims had healed completely after they had been returned to their sleep pods.

And then there was that strange reply by Segovia. He did not wish to file a charge against Forrester because he was in love with Ensign Hudson. That would seem to make Hudson the key to the mystery, but we had only been able to elicit testimony from him under mindscan, and now it appeared that further probing might injure him. Yet he had seemed willing enough to let us do this to him—why, I could not understand. Putting Hudson back under was now out of the question, even if—from a legal standpoint—I was willing to permit it. As I saw it, the only remaining path to the answer lay with the defendant, Forrester. A scan of his mind would certainly elicit everything we needed to know, but such a thing was completely out of the question. A man could not be forced to testify against himself. Oh, but how I would dearly have loved to watch the images that must have been emblazoned on that man's memory! Of course, if he were really innocent, the defense might call upon him to have it. I almost wished they would.

But as I had observed earlier, Hudson had to be the key. I wished I might find some excuse to meet with him privately, and the very idea sent a surge of fire through my balls. I wanted to feel that hard, gloriously defined body against mine—under me, preferably, getting the daylights fucked out of him. But he also had the answers I needed—not only the answers to the behavior of Forrester and Segovia, but possibly to the reasons for the Service having dumped this messy case onto me. I was sure of this, although I could not have explained why. It was simply intuitive.

After dinner, I went back to the hearing room to look over my notes and to review the material in Ensign Hudson's service record. It had not struck me at first glance, but as I slowly scanned the material again, I realized that entries in the ensign's file were unusually sparse. He had never received either a reprimand or a commendation. He had been assigned to a special tactical unit for almost the entire time he had been in service, never moved around to gain experience as was normally done. The printout, of course, came from the central mainframe, which made all the entries uniform in appearance—same typeface, everything phrased in proper service "bureaucratese." Something which might have been written in by hand, or added as an afterthought, was all printed out in neat, computerized type on the pages before me. All semblance of personal, human feelings on the part of his superiors had been obliterated.

It was in his medical record that I stumbled on the first real clue. The man had never been on sick call. In 16 years of service, he had not so much as requested a pill for a headache, suffered a muscular strain or sprain, or requested a shot for a cold or flu. But everyone needed a shot once in a while. Medical science had still not found a vaccine to prevent a cold, but at the first symptoms a man could get a simple, painless treatment to stop its progress.

I decided to call in my G-2. Commander Vince Nagumba was a very handsome, very black, very clever intelligence officer. His gleaming, satiny skin had driven me wild when we first met, but that had been years ago. The initial passions had long since dissipated, and we had become close friends. In fact, I trust him so explicitly, I had done a considerable bit of maneuvering to get him promoted and assigned to his present post. He was more than a friend; he was completely loyal—and smart.

An hour later, in my quarters—and over a snifter of brandy—I explained the situation to him. I gave him a sketchy overview of the entire hearing, but detailed the results of the scan—thereby leaving myself open to court-martial if he ever betrayed me.

"Henry," he said when I finished, "I agree that someone is trying to hang you, and I might be able to get a line on it from friends at GHQ earthside, except if I try to contact them on hyperspace relay it'll have to go right through the Centauri complex. They'll be on us like ferrets. I think your best bet is to get Hudson aside and grill him."

"You know I can't do that, Vince. It would breach every regulation in the book."

"No, I know you can't," he said, placing his enormous paw on my leg and wriggling one long finger up under my codpiece. "Just as I thought," he added, smiling. "You're horny as a goat, and you want to stick Junior, here, up the ensign's bucket."

I grinned back at him. "You know it!" I replied. I lay back in the chair, which adjusted to my shift of weight and dropped me into a comfortable reclining posture. Vince's finger remained in contact with my cock, playing with it until it felt ready to break through the fabric. He was still a painfully handsome man, I thought. He'd elected to hold his age at about 25, whereas I had stopped some ten years further on. Flag ranks seldom held at an age under 30, because the few extra lines added character and dignity to the face. A man's body, of course, was never allowed to age beyond its prime. If someone got careless and started to show a thickening about the waist, he was immediately called in by the medical department and put on a regimen of diet and conditioning machines.

"So I guess I'd better get busy," said Vince, reluctantly withdrawing his hand. "Just to be on the safe side, I'll use Bobby to bring him in. Keep an eye on your internal monitor; I'll try to arrange the... whatever, to take place where you can view it."

He got up, preparing to leave, when I stopped him. "Maybe I should fill in all the gaps, so you have the whole story," I suggested, "give you a blow-by-blow of the hearing. I know it won't go any further, and it'll give you a better basis..."

Vince grinned at me, almost condescendingly. "I wouldn't be much of an intelligence officer if I didn't already know... blow-by-blow," he answered smugly.

My face must have shown my surprise, because he continued: "Look, Henry, I'm your friend, remember? There's something very fishy about this hearing. You know it; I know it... knew it from the start. I'm not going to let them fuck you, baby—not unless they kiss you along with it.”

“Then you’re convinced it really is a setup to get at me? I’m not being schizy about it?” I watched his expression, obsidian eyes returning my gaze, so startling—out of place, really, in the blue-black of his skin.

“As I see it, there are three men who can be hurt by this case. The first, obviously, is Midshipman Forrester. The second is that asshole who’s supposed to prosecute him. If he loses such an open-and-shut situation, he’ll slide down the tube feet first. The third is you, if you don’t handle it in such a way as to avoid any embarrassment to the Service, but at the same time render bles him, but whose appearance is the perfection of all the suggested beauty in Phil... and what have you? Bait for a trap? A gift from the gods?

“Sir, are you all right?” he asked. He took a halting step forward, as if afraid I might be ill, but fearful lest he transcend the unwritten barrier between us. This was not merely our different ranks; Phil was a slave—a thoroughly dedicated slave, and I had become his Master. He knew better than to touch me without permission.

“Yes, yes; I’m fine,” I told him. “You’d better make some coffee. I’m going to be up for a while.”

an apparently fair—at least legal—decision on Forrester.”

“That makes me one of three,” I replied slowly, trying to evade his logic. “The odds are two-to-one against its being me they’re after—whichever ‘they’ may be.”

“Except that someone’s gone to a lot of trouble and expense to set it up,” he reminded me. “Assuming it is a setup. But who’d waste that much time and effort—to say nothing of the expense—to nail a silly junior midshipman, or that ass of an advocate, who’s already been sidetracked because everyone knows he’s a ninny? No, Henry old boy; it’s your hide they want nailed to the wall, and it’s my job to find out why.”

“And who,” I added.

Vince shrugged. “If it goes too high, we may never be able to answer that one,” he said grimly. “But the ‘why’ should allow us an educated guess. Just remember, this stupid kid pulled a dozen men out of deepsleep, ostensibly to have sex with them—all at once. But you know as well as I do, nobody can control that number of guys and have any kind of a scene. The reason for his attempting this—plus the fact that no one seems willing to testify against him... well, that looks to me like the key to what we’re after.”

“And you think Hudson is going to give us the answer?”

He nodded, looking thoughtfully at the space above my head. “He’s the most logical starting point,” said Vince softly. “Just keep your eye on the monitor. If I’m right, you may find the picture very interesting.”

With that, he slipped out the door, leaving me in a worse quandary than I had been in before he arrived. Then I had been merely worried; now I was downright scared.

Hearing our guest leave, Phil—my orderly—came in from the other door, asking if there was anything I wanted before I went to bed. As he stood just within the room, the light from my table lamp struck his face at exactly the right angle, and for a moment I might have been looking at Ensign Xavier Hudson. The sudden realization of this resemblance struck me so pointedly that I sat down again, staring at him—or rather, past him... through him, at nothing. A jumble of impossible ideas now pressed in on my brain. It was undoubtedly common knowledge that I had selected Phil as my orderly because I found him sexually attractive. This would have been assumed as a standard criterion, expected as such. It would therefore follow that his physical type would appeal to me. So, send in another man who resem-

The encounter between Ensign Hudson and Vince’s operative, Bobby, came onto my viewscreen about two hours later. I should note, here, that Bobby was one of those fatally attractive men whose physical attributes were attended by a charm that only a saint might resist. He was also one of the most devious agents in our entire intelligence organization. I had known better than to trifle with him right from the start, because his loyalty was to Vince—only incidentally to me, and that because Vince was my man. He was about five feet ten—right in the middle, short to a tall man, small to a big one. His build was lithe and his motions agile, his face almost angelic when he wanted it to be; but his high cheek bones permitted him to assume an air of handsome disdain when that suited his purpose better. He was also a true sexual athlete who could assume any role his partner seemed to desire. He could turn his passion on and off at will, and after observing him in action a few times, I began to think his playacting had actually denuded his emotional being until it existed only as an extension of his intellect.

With Hudson, he assumed a coy, bantering affect to which the other man seemed to respond. They entered the room—ostensibly Bobby’s quarters—directly from the officers’ lounge. As soon as the door closed behind them Bobby took the ensign in his arms and started to kiss him. He had his back to the lens, so that I could see only the dark hair on the back of his head, but I could see Hudson full face. He returned the kiss, apparently with passion, but all the while his eyes remained open and he seemed to be staring directly at me. Not only that, but as the two men continued their prolonged embrace, I could see the ensign’s eyes move as he examined every aspect of the room. But his body had responded appropriately, because Bobby was on his knees a moment later, extracting Hudson’s fully erect penis and beginning to nuzzle it, while the ensign’s hands cupped automatically behind his head, guiding his motions. Still, all the while, those bird-of-prey eyes continued to take in every square millimeter of the room.

It was eerie to watch them, because Bobby—for once in his deceptive life—was being taken in! Hudson responded with every correct and proper move in their sexual interaction, at least insofar as Bobby was able to feel, see or otherwise observe. But I could see that he was... what? distracted? I couldn’t be sure, but something wasn’t quite right. I wished I might somehow have whispered my concern into Bobby's ear. Then, as I continued to watch, Hudson seemed to relax, as if he had initially been wary, but had now convinced himself that everything was all right. He allowed Bobby to stretch him out, spread-eagle on his back. He made no move to resist as his wrists and ankles were secured to the four corners of the bed.

Hudson's apparent change in mood communicated itself to me, because I also sat back in my chair, really starting to enjoy the spectacle. Here was a man who absolutely epitomized my physical "type," slender athletic body, very blond, with a neatly trimmed beard, very light gray eyes. Bound now to the bed, flexing gently against his bonds, he was driving me to an almost painful level of desire. His own cock lay bloated and half erect, arching lazily across one thigh, deep blue veins etched against its ruddy contour. A drop of fluid oozed through the folds of skin about the head. His balls hung deeply within the cavity formed by his widespread legs, heavy orbs lying atop the sheet, lifting slightly with every intake of breathe.

I saw Bobby step away from him, move toward a closet as if about to extract some instrument for use against the stretched, flexing muscles. I might have missed the motion, except that Hudson suddenly turned his head to watch and I saw Bobby's finger touch a tiny panel on the wall before it continued on to the doorknob. There was a sudden change in the screen, as the radiations from a body scanner struck Hudson's body. In almost the same instant his arms and legs contracted, snapping his bonds as if they had been gossamer threads. Then he was sitting cross-legged on the bed, and the screen returned to its normal projection.

But in that momentary glimpse I had seen the potential answer to my questions. Or had I merely gleaned a modicum of information that would serve to deepen the mystery? I couldn't hope to fathom the final answer without further help and investigation, but I had seen the outlines of metal and plastic beneath Hudson's skin. He was, at least partially, an android. It would take a slow motion examination of the recording to know whether his skull contained a human brain, or whether this, too, was artificial. Robot or cyborg? Regardless, the glorious exterior had been specifically designed to appear as it did... designed to be the exact physical type to which I would be most likely to respond. A deliberate bit of bait to tempt me? Coincidence? I lay back in my chair, watching as Hudson began to pull on his uniform, saying nothing to Bobby, who stood helplessly on the other side of the bed.

I decided to keep the knowledge of Hudson's status to myself for the time being. But as I called the next session to order, I felt uneasy about doing this, because it made meaningless so much of everybody's efforts. Listlessly, I listened as Midshipman Segovia concluded his testimony. He described the procedure, as far as he had been able to observe it, by which Forrester returned his subjects to deepsleep. With all of them naked, their hands manacled behind their backs, bound by their genitals to the barred doors of the cells, the defendant had been able to take one man at a time down to the barracks. He had been accompanied on each occasion by Hudson, leaving Segovia bound in the row with the others. Once out of his sight, of course, the witness could not tell us what transpired with the others.

When only Segovia remained bound to the bars, standing totally alone in the silent corridor, he had experienced a real flash of anger. As badly as he had wanted to get it on with Forrester, the man had ignored him until this moment. Then he had been awakened merely as one of a dozen men, and singled out only for heavier abuse and humiliation. He alone had been allowed to go without food, and he had been forced to debase himself by servicing all the others. Now, as Forrester and Hudson were returning the tenth man to the barracks, he had been left alone, bound by his nuts to a steel-barred door. He might easily injure himself, he reasoned; he might faint of low blood sugar, and no one would be there to help him.

With a little prodding from the defense, he admitted that his major displeasure did not result from his fear of any potential danger, however. He was an inordinately attractive man; yet Forrester had treated him in a cavalier, almost disdainful manner. It had rankled him. Then, the man who really attracted Segovia the most strongly, the man whom he now professed to love—Hudson—seemed to have become Forrester's favorite. He denied that he hated Forrester, but admitted that he had come to dislike him. "Silly little fluff," I thought. "He probably falls in love with every big hard cock that slides up his ass."

When the two men returned, Segovia was untied and required to kneel in front of Hudson. The ensign had been given a pair of space boots, but otherwise remained as naked as before. Forrester had once again secured Hudson's hands together behind his back and ordered him to stand "at ease" while Segovia was required to start at his toes, "to lick, to suck, to make love to the ensign's boots," to gradually work his way upward until he reached the crotch. As I listened to his description of servicing Hudson's cock, I wondered how he would react if he knew he had been swinging on plasticized synthetic, that the load he had taken was an emulsified imitation of the semen he thought had flowed across his tongue. It also occurred to me that this discharge might have been fortified with the nutrients Segovia had assumed he had been denied. Interesting thought.

I mentally tuned out the remainder of Segovia's testimony, mulling over in my own mind the various possibilities. Was it conceivable that Forrester knew the truth about Hudson? And what was that truth? If the ensign was a cyborg; i.e., a largely or completely artificial body, but with a human brain in his plastic-metal skull, that would explain his susceptibility to the mindscan. I didn't know enough about robotics to be sure how an electronic brain would react, whether it could produce images capable of the reproduction we had seen. But on the basis of my limited expertise, it would seem to be one argument in favor of a human brain.

On the other hand, until he had been transferred to the Scarpa Flow, Hudson had been on only one assignment—for far too long, and had not been promoted. That argued in favor of his being a total robot. A man would have made some attempt to transfer. Or would he? If his body were experimental and he needed to be closely monitored by doctors and other scientists, that could explain his apparent lassitude. Strangely, despite my knowledge that he wasn't real, I found my mental image of his physical perfection just as arousing as when I had assumed his humanity to be genuine. I rifled the corners of the pages in front of me... Hudson's service record. Well, that certainly couldn't be genuine. No wonder it was so sparse and sterile. It was phony, just as phony as that sexy, gleaming body.

I was brought back to the real world by a sudden shouted objection from Commander Blake. "If the court please," whined the prosecutor, "the defense is attempting to intimidate the witness!"

"In what way, Mr. Blake?" I asked.

"Sir, every time Midshipman Segovia begins to describe a new outrage that the defendant perpetrated upon his body, the defendant stares at him and makes snide little motions with his fingers. I've observed this, now, half a dozen times, and I'm certain it has caused the witness to alter his testimony."

"I find it difficult to believe some eye contact and body language on the part of the defendant could so grossly affect the witness," I returned coldly, but even as I spoke the words I wondered. Hudson was either a cyborg or an android robot. What might Forrester be? As an afterthought, I fixed the defendant with a stern expression and demanded, "Do you possess psychic abilities, young man?"

For several moments silence reigned in the hearing room, as my question was digested by everyone present. I had done it with such a straight face that even the lawyers weren't sure whether I meant to receive an answer, or whether it was a bit of rhetorical sarcasm. However, Forrester's normally swarthy complexion was suddenly more ruddy than it had been before. He stared back at me in surprise, and finally decided that I expected a reply.

"I...I do seem to have some such ability," he stammered. "But I've never been tested for it, and I've never used it intentionally, although it seems much stronger lately."

The defense began to protest, but I waved him down. "This court will adjourn, and the officers of the board will meet privately in my quarters at 1100 hours," I said, bringing down the gavel.

"Gentlemen," I said, after we were assembled and door closed behind us, "I don't know what's going on here, but someone is trying to make fools of us. I don't know who or why, but I for one am not going to stand for it."

I glanced around at my six companions, knowing within myself that one of them had to be a spy for someone higher up. By maintaining the stern, almost angry facade with which I had conducted the entire hearing I hoped to force some sort of revealing response from the bastard. But regardless of my success or failure in this, I certainly intended that whatever conclusions came out of this hearing, the blame—or credit—was going to be equally spread among my fellow officers.

"Commodore," began Captain Hanks—an old friend who now commanded our newest strike carrier, "I've had the feeling from the start that these men were playing some kind of game with us. I think they're all in on it—all dozen of the alleged victims, although I admit I can't figure out what Segovia is trying to do."

The others all seemed to agree, and I realized after several minutes of back and forth discussion that I would have unanimous agreement if I elected to simply dismiss the charges and sweep the whole thing under the rug. But it would have to be done on my recommendation. No one else was going to propose it. I was tempted to do just that, except that I knew the answer was not this simple. When the conversation finally dropped off, and all faces turned in my direction, waiting for me to take the lead, I decided to lay it all out for them.

"Gentlemen," I sighed, "if it were merely Forrester and his dozen playmates involved in this I'd wholeheartedly agree with you. I don't know what we've stumbled onto, but I can assure you it's a good deal more complicated than you think. Are you aware, for instance, that Ensign Hudson is an android?"

I struck paydirt! Five of my fellow board members stared at me in a mixture of shock and disbelief, the sixth blanched and looked down at his feet. This was Commodore Harley-Smythe, who commanded the next star base spaceside from mine. He was very much junior to me, having been only recently promoted, and had been assigned to the board ostensibly because he happened to be in the area, en route back to his command. When the mutters of surprise died down, it was he who broke the silence.

"Commodore Baumann," he said to me, "I find it difficult to believe you just made that statement. There has been no investigation instigated by this board to discover such a thing, and it would have been highly improper had you done so on your own without informing the rest of us."

"In other words, Commodore," I replied, "you want to know how I found out. Well, I wouldn't be much of a station commandant if I let things go on within my command without being aware of them." Thank Mother Space for Vince Nagumba, I thought; then, taking a chance I'd never have to prove it, I continued: "I know about Hudson, because the man hasn't used the head since he came here, and he hasn't needed to get a single item of uniform clothing cleaned. A man who neither sweats nor shits is something other than a man. Then, look at his medical record," I added. "You all have copies of that. He hasn't been on sick call in 16 years of service. Despite his being a seemingly exemplary officer, he's still an ensign—an ensign who's made no effort to get transferred, or otherwise improve himself. I would also like to state that all of this occurred to me only last evening, and I am taking this opportunity to inform you." Having thus covered my ass, I let Harley-Smythe have the floor.

He stared at me for at least a full minute, before he let a grin spread across his face. "Gentlemen," he said, "I have to admit that all of us—all of you—have been subjected to a little experiment. No, no," he continued, raising his hand to ward off the rising murmur of protest, "it isn't anything evil or devious. As you know, I was aide to Grand Admiral Summerfield for a number of years, before receiving my present assignment. The Admiral is due here in about 36 hours. In fact, I imagine Commodore Baumann will be receiving an announcement any minute. That is all I am permitted to say, except to request that all of this be kept confidential until the Admiral explains it to you. However, I was authorized to add—in the event our ploy was discovered prematurely—that the Admiral is most appreciative of your patience and cooperation."

After all the initial formalities of receiving a Grand Admiral were concluded, and Summerfield had met with the board members to ease any ruffled feathers, he and I retired to my quarters for cocktails before the formal dinner that evening. So far, all his explanations had seemed rather superficial to me, but because of his rank no one had dared question him.

"Well, Henry," he said as he settled into one of the servochairs with a tall drink in his hand, "it's been a long time since you backed me up on that Scalecian thing...what 80...82 standard?"

I laughed as I reclined opposite him. "You old phony," I replied. "It was 96 earth-standard years ago, and you know it to the minute. Now what's all this crap? I thought somebody was out to scalp me."

"They were, baby; they were!" he roared. "But I figured you had to be just a shade sharper than that gang of pussy-footing, vanilla-sex hounds at GHQ. They wanted you to fall on your ass trying to extricate that dizzy midshipman, when you discovered he liked his sex a little spicier than most. Do you know how long it took them to design that robot so he'd be exactly your type? Shit, they had you analyzed on three different computers to make sure everything fit. That's how I caught them, by the way. Damned fools used Big Buns to run their final checks, and I just happened to have a drive configuration going through at the same time. Harley-Smythe went down personally to check some figures and saw your name on a piece of scrap paper. He told me, and I overrode their security block to find out what they were up to."

"So, what did they expect me to do? Bend the rules to get the kid off?"

"Well, they thought they had you either way," he said. "If you'd let him off, they'd have set you up with Hudson and claimed your SM proclivities had adversely influenced your judgment. If you'd ended up filing charges on Forrester, they'd have used it as precedent to start picking off the guys who were playing rougher games than they think is good for the Service. You were the test; you must see that. Any ruling had to come from a flag rank with SM tastes. Of course, that was all secondary to the official reason for this whole charade. We really wanted to determine how long it would take a group of men with the combined experience of the Board to spot a robot."

"I still don't understand why they used Forrester instead of Hudson then," I admitted.

"A robot can't harm a human, remember? It can play sex games, but you take it past the point where the guy it's working on really doesn't like it, and he's got to stop. By the same token, it couldn't do anything to damage your career, because that would be hurting you. Forrester's just a twirp they set up to do their dirty work...never really understood all the ramifications, but he's a low-level esper. The Hudson robot is too—but much, much stronger than Forrester. The two of them communicated, you see...empathized, I guess you'd call it, with Forrester trying to set out the hook for you, and using Hudson as bait. Except that the robot was actually guiding the action without Forrester knowing it—took over, for instance, right after Forrester took him out of deepsleep, let himself be worked over and made the human happy by putting on a good show for him. It was the fine points of these exchanges that the programmers couldn't plan for—just had to leave it up to the robot's general instructions.

"What they really didn't count on was: First, you know when to keep your cock in your pants," he was ticking off these points on his fingers, smacking my thigh each time. "Second, they forgot that ESP works two ways, and while Forrester was supposed to do some real harm to a couple of his victims, the robot wouldn't let him. That weakened their case, and then the damned machine decided it would harm Forrester if the others testified against him, so he blocked them, too. Thirdly, along comes Midshipman Segovia. What a little doll that one is! Well, this sexpot falls in love with the robot, and Forrester falls in love with him. But the grand master of this pot boiler tells Forrester 'hands off' until after the court-martial—they figured it would come to that. Hudson was supposed to give the Board enough 'involuntary' evidence to merit further action. Except the mindscan started to overload his circuits and he went into the prearranged pantsing sequence. Your scanner is an older model than the one they tested him on, and it must have shot a heavier load of electrons into him." The admiral grinned, then, laughing at himself. "Listen to me," he said, "calling that machine 'him.' I mean 'it,' of course."

"So Hudson really is a full robot, not a cyborg," I sighed. "Too bad."

The Grand Admiral grinned at my obvious disappointment. "I know it isn't much fun to whip a robot's ass," he said, "Even if he's programmed to respond like it hurts him. But they make good tops, too, especially with a high level of ESP. They'll go just as far as you want, and no farther. And, as I remember, you could take all I could give, back in the old days. Don't you still get the urge to bottom out once in a while." His hand had remained on my thigh long after he finished ticking off his point. He now gave a squeeze that all but made me cry out in pain. (The son of a bitch always had been the strongest man I ever knew.) "We've got a couple hours before dinner," he continued. "Maybe we ought to relive our youth."

I'd been top for so long, it took me a few moments to recapture the old sensations I used to have when (then) Lt. Commander Summerfield had trained me. "I guess it's okay for a Commodore to bottom out for a Grand Admiral," I replied softly.

I watched him as he shifted his weight in the servochair, and the mechanism remolded itself to his body. He was facing me, now, reclining back on the seat with his legs spread wide apart. "Grand Admiral," I thought... "the highest rank in the Space Service... five stars"... only four other men in the galaxy shared that distinction. But I had served with him, trained under him when he was just another aspiring midrank officer. He hadn't changed very much, although he now permitted a trace of gray to show at his temples. But his skin was smooth with a healthy, youthful glow. His curly, dark-brown hair was disheveled from his having worn his plumed helmet, and this gave him an even younger aspect. His body, even beneath the gleaming black of his uniform was just as hard as I remembered it, powerful muscles of arms and torso straining against the fitted material.

He wore boots of his own design, as did most of us from my rank up, because it was our privilege to express ourselves as we wished in our manner of dress. His were real leather, black and mirror bright. The soles were quite thick, unlike the standard issue of lower ranks, and the tops fitted tightly about his calves, had a joint at the knee—much like an athlete's leg guard—and continued up to midthigh, where they buckled firmly about his leg. Instead of the usual satin-velvet synthetic of a normal uniform, his was suede, blacker than black, fitted and cleverly tailored to display his hard-muscled body to its best advantage.

His face had the weathered look of a young mariner, rather long features that combined to a handsome look of sternness, offset somewhat by his very dark eyes which seemed almost limpid, with an implication of forgiveness. His ears were deeply lobed and his fingers were long and thick, two clues to the substantial manhood now pressing hard against his sculptured leather codpiece. He watched with some show of amusement when my gaze dropped to the area of his crotch, and he commanded me forward, onto my knees.

I quickly fell into the long dormant role I had always assumed with him, willingly submitting myself to the one man I had ever accepted as Master. I gave no thought to my orderly, who could well have stumbled upon us, or to any other consideration of the privileged status I had grown to know and enjoy. Instead, I buried my face in the leathery aura of his groin, savoring the scent of raw leather about his codpiece. I managed to dislodge the pair of snaps that held it in place, saw the natural color of its inner surface as it fell away, my senses intoxicated by aromas of hide, mingled with his sweat and the essence of genitals. He must have known I would be kneeling before him, and he remembered the effect all of this used to have on me. He had probably allowed his cock to go a day or two without its usual scrubbing, just long enough to let the fragrance reach that tantalizing point of ripened manhood. He had achieved exactly the right degree of this, and as I gently nuzzled the wrinkled foreskin I felt him lean forward and seize my upper arms.

He maneuvered my wrists together, so that I was in the posture of bondage, of total supplication before he granted permission to take his cock. This was a command more easily given than obeyed, because the bulbous crown was almost more than a man might hold within his oral cavity. But I had learned to do it years before. The trick was to force enough slickness up to coat it, then to press onto it without concern for the seemingly impossible fullness it created. Fortunately, it never got so steely hard it wouldn't bend; at least it never had before. I was floating on a cloud of bliss, as if I'd taken some exotic drug, and his enormous tool was alternately gagging me and sliding back to give breathing space, while my senses continued to absorb the scents of his body and its accoutrements.

Finally, he left me kneeling before his empty chair, with orders to remain in place. He went to the door leading into the rear of my quarters and called for Phil, telling him to summon Ensign Hudson, but not to return himself until it was time to get my formal uniform out for the dinner party. He added something else, which I couldn't hear, then returned to the room. Phil left by the service entrance, never catching a glimpse of me; but at the moment, I would not have cared.

He ordered me to strip, then, stood in front of me as I shed my uniform. His fingers explored the curves and plains, testing the muscle tone to be sure I had kept myself in shape. He seemed satisfied, remarking on the improved cording of my abdomen, twisting my nipples and noting that they had flattened out a bit, "probably from lack of proper use." I was never as large or bulky as Summerfield, but my musculature had always been more "showy," because I had a thinner skin, he'd always told me. That made me more responsive to his usage, as well, for the nerve endings lay closer to the surface and were sensitive to every contact.

He unfastened the front of his tunic, discarding it with its heavy constellation of silver and diamond service pips. Then his naked arms encircled me, drawing me into him and our mouths came together. His powerful tool had lodged between my legs, pressing upward against the inside of my crotch as if trying to provide a perch on which I might be suspended. "You're just as beautiful as ever," he whispered as we drew apart. "You're like that ancient statue I have in my garden back home," he continued, "except your flesh is real and warm. I've missed you, Henry, really missed you." He kissed me again, allowing his fingers to trace the length of my spine, finally dropping to the cleft of my ass and exploring that as well. "You've got a body like a young cadet."

He stepped back, rubbing the patch of hair on my chest with the back of his hand. "Just that little growth up here... and down there," he continued, twisting thumb and forefinger into the light-brown shield. He tightened his grip, and I moved against him, involuntarily trying to limit the pain. His digits moved another few inches and closed about the base of my cock and balls, subjecting them to a gradually increasing pressure. He allowed his fingers to rove the length of my penis, poking his thumb into the foreskin, rubbing the crown where a thick moisture had already gathered. He had just started to kiss me again when a knock sounded at the door.

"That'll be Hudson," he said.

The android entered, a living sculpture that epitomized my ideal... at least the perfect imitation of a man I might wish to subjugate. At the admiral's command, Hudson stripped, and I found myself responding to his beauty, despite my knowing that he wasn't real. But at Summerfield's further instruction, he came up to me, warm and naked, human in every outward aspect. He was slightly shorter than I was, lithe in movement, delicately defined, skin a luscious peachy color. I took him in my arms as I had the admiral, allowed his lips to lock on mine, felt the pressure of his tongue and let it enter me. Although I had seen a demonstration of his strength, he carefully gauged the pressure of his embrace to the precisely desired degree. His cock was touching mine, growing hard and thick as the contact caused me to reciprocate.

There was nothing about him to suggest his artificial state, neither in appearance or behavior, and after a few minutes I found it hard to believe he wasn't everything he appeared to be. I responded to him as I would have to a man who looked exactly like him. Under Summerfield's direction, he backed me into the metal frame where I had often disciplined my own subjects, and bound my wrists with rope to the upper ends of the X-shaped cross. Then my ankles were secured as well, and I stood spread and helpless, facing the two figures who represented the quintessence of my dual desires—the ultimate top, the perfect bottom. Yet, at the moment, I was subservient to them both and that, too, seemed a summation of perfection.

"I'd love to have you the other way around," said the admiral, "so I could lay a few strokes across your ass and remind you that there are still a few men out there worthy to be your Master. But we have our duties to perform tonight, and I wouldn't want to rush it." He walked up to me, and worked my tits as he spoke. "I have a special ceremony in mind right now," he continued. "Maybe after dinner, we can pick up where we leave off." He increased his grip, until I winced and pulled against my bonds. It had been so long since anything like this had happened to me, it was almost a fresh experience... a flashback to days of pseudo-youth, when my experience, at least, had been limited and in need of growth, my body requiring instruction.

He motioned for the android to bring a small package which he had left on the table by his chair. As I watched in bewildered expectation, he opened the leather case and took out a small flask of clear liquid. He opened it and soaked first one tit, then the other. He grinned at my look of consternation, as the fluid seared my skin and the fumes of his antiseptic wafted against my nasal sensors. His deep, dark eyes stared into mine for several seconds, then he abruptly broke the contact, finished by pouring the remainder of fluid into his hands and rubbing them together.

"Do you know what I'm going to do to you?" he asked.

"No, Sir," I replied.

"Oh, yes, you do. Doesn't he?" he added, looked over his shoulder at Hudson.

"He suspects, Sir; but he doesn't know."

"Interesting," said the admiral. "I think you two will develop an excellent rapport." With that, he shoved back the hinged lid of his case with the back of his hand, and pulled a pair of shiny objects from the white-lined interior. "And do you know what these are?" he asked me.

I looked at the pair of metal objects that now lay within the palm of one hand. "Stars," I said, "admirals' insignia."

"That's right," he assured me. "Two of them. You're being promoted, Commodore. You're now a rear admiral—a term I've seldom found as appropriate as it is right at this moment."

As I watched in a mixture of emotion, helpless to resist and knowing it was useless to beg him not to do it, he took hold of my left nipple, pulled it out hard from my body, and slid the pointed fastener of the first star through my flesh. I responded to the pain by a deep, barely controlled groan, feeling my knees buckle and the weight of my body come down full against the bindings on my wrists. From the corner of my eye, I saw Hudson take a step forward, as if to interfere. I forced my mind to clear itself of any response to pain. I thought of the man who stood in front of me, of my love for him, and this must have communicated itself to the robot. Hudson backed away.

The admiral had to have seen this exchange, but he chose to ignore it. He opened the pin on the second star, as I steeled myself for the next penetration of my flesh. I continued to project the positive thoughts I had previously generated. This time, the android made no move to interfere, and strangely enough I felt a surging warmth within myself, with the pain a stabbing unreality in the background of consciousness. Instead of trying to twist away from him, I found myself wishing to touch this man who had just used my promotion as a medium for a mutual exchange that no other might fully appreciate. But, I wondered, had the robot used his extrasensory powers to dull my pain?

"Now," said the admiral, stepping back to admire his handiwork, "I want you to understand that I had these especially made...solid gold, mind you, and guaranteed not to irritate your delicate skin. I'm going to announce your promotion at the dinner tonight, and you'll be presented with a standard set of stars to pin on your uniform. But you'll already be wearing the insignia of rank, where only you and I will know. And, if you're man enough to carry it out, maybe I'll come back here with you afterward, and give you a proper reward."

"Yes, Sir," I whispered.

"Think you can carry it off?"

"Yes, Sir," I assured him, again forcing my affection for him to override the pain.

He gestured for Hudson to turn me loose, as he continued speaking to me. I had been reassigned, he explained. I was to go as military ambassador to the Solarian Empire—our principal rival in the known galaxy. "Hudson will go with you," he continued. "That was the real point of this entire exercise...now, and over the last few days. We're convinced he'll pass scrutiny, and serve as both your aide and bodyguard—and maybe do a little mental eavesdropping on your Imperial hosts. Whatever other uses you wish to make of him, of course, are up to you. Then, if you carry it off as I know you will, I'm working to have you jumped in rank...get you a third star."

He clamped one huge paw around my cock, as the final bonds fell from my ankles and I stepped away from the cross. "Guess where I'm going to install that one," he said, crushing the fold of foreskin beneath my cockhead. He grinned again and kissed me lightly on the lips.

A sudden spasm of pain erupted from my nipples as I allowed my thoughts to shift, but it lasted only a moment. I glanced at Hudson, realizing that the android had to have felt my discomfort and reacted to protect me. With his help, I'll damned well get through that dinner and then we'll see if the old man still has the touch, I thought.

Mistaking the meaning of my glance, the admiral let out a roar of laughter. "You'll get used to him," he assured me. "I bet you'll even come to love him. Robots make good pals," he added. "They do whatever you want them to do, and they never tell on you. You've been afraid to play your rightful game all these years, for fear your dignity would suffer. Now you've got no excuse."

"It's going to be interesting," I agreed. "Very interesting." I walked thoughtfully into the bathroom to clean up for the coming ordeal, wondering who would prove to be master of the situation at the Imperial Court...wondering if Summerfield realized just how solid a rapport already existed between Hudson and me.

"Hudson," I thought, "not 'the robot.' 'Him'; not 'it.'" Yes, it would be interesting. And I wanted that third star. □

DRUMMERMAN ILLUSTRATION by BILL WARD

GQ, LADIES HOME JOURNAL OR...

When I first saw your cute photograph on page 4 of the new Drummer (issue 99) in tuxedos and holding champagne glasses, I thought it was some kind of inside joke.

However, now that I have finished with your first issue, I can only assume it was not a joke, but meant to convey what you were going to do to the magazine—turn it into a Gentlemen's Quarterly for "leathermen."

If this is your plan, count me out. Your changes should really help sales for Manscape and other magazines who still have their balls intact.

C.A.
Glendale, CA

From "the 'Instead of' Magazine for the Macho Male" to the Ladies Home Journal in one fell swoop!

I had expected, and hoped for, so much more from the originators of DungeonMaster.

What's planned for "milestone issue 100"? Congratulatory telegrams from Edwin Meese and Rev. Jerry Fallwell to replace the 'pretty,' and dated, front and back cover photographs? Or maybe an article by Anita Bryant if your new author Tim Barrus doesn't have another 'erotic' story ready.

Obviously I must have misunderstood your publishers' statement. I thought you were referring to the 1950s, but you actually meant the 1850s.

B.S.

MULTIPLE CHOICE: This drawing and its accompanying story is typical for which publication? (Only one answer is correct.) a) Ladies Home Journal, b) Gentlemen's Quarterly, c) The Advocate, d) Honcho, e) First Hand, f) Drummer.

In your attempt to create a 'new' Drummer, it seems you have made a magazine of 'old,' or as referred to in publishing circles, 'stale' news.

1) You devote four pages of photographs to International Mr. Leather contests, the most recent of which was held six months ago. We know you are from Chicago, but are you also being financed by Chuck Renslow?

2) You began installment publication of "Sado Island," which was first published in early 1985, and for which I paid $12.50 in one issue. Why should I now pay $4.95 per excerpt to read it again?

3) Not only was the collage of Gay Games photos amateurish (better suited to a junior high school yearbook) and again dated, but they've been covered before and better in The Advocate and other general-interest, gay publications.

For the first time in buying all but two of ninety-nine issues of Drummer, I feel as though I've been deliberately "ripped-off." The most interesting and erotic reading in the entire issue was the Dear Sir column.

If you didn't want to publish the type of magazine that Drummer has been since its inception, why did you buy it?

R.P.
San Francisco, CA

(Ed.: We have received numerous congratulatory letters and phone calls. Above are three critical ones. I think the quiz question above is adequate response to the first two, but the third one deserves more: First, I must point out that most of the contents of Drummer 99 were taken from materials on file here at the time of our purchase. While I planned the basic content of the magazine, I had to be in Chicago closing down operations while it was actually being done. Both the Gay Games and the International Mr. Leather Contest were to be covered from a uniquely Drummer point of view—Sweat and Strain. However, nature and circumstances did not cooperate. During the Gay Games, San Francisco experienced one of Mark Twain's winters: straining muscles were kept warmly covered and sweat was little in evidence. Similarly, the photos from IML that I had planned to feature, photos of the contestants pumping up before the contest, were deemed by the art director to be too cluttered and of too poor a quality for use. Other IML photos were substituted. I think that either of these photo features would have been okay for publication in Drummer—but the two together made for too few "cock shots." We have done better in Issue 100 and will continue to do so.

As for reprinting items like "Sado

Island," I totally disagree with the criticism. It is an excellent work, many Drummer readers did not buy it upon publication, and many of those who did will enjoy reading it again. No one is going to be totally interested in everything in any magazine. They pay the cover price for the parts they are interested in, not for the parts they are not interested in.

As for the type of magazine we want to publish—bear with us for a few issues and watch us grow, rather than judging by our first attempt. —AFD)

BOUND TO BE CONTROVERSY

Slightly less than a week ago at a friend's birthday party, I heard, "Drummer's not going to publish bondage photos anymore. Tony's letter says it is because of the feds."

I was outraged and said I would cancel my subscription as soon as the latest issue arrived and I had the opportunity to actually read what you wrote.

Well, I've read it. I'm still upset, but not enough to cancel. You've still left me the option of Mach and DungeonMaster.

I'll keep an eye on the last couple of issues of Drummer left on my subscription, but I don't anticipate renewing it at this time.

However, you will find enclosed a check for a subscription to Mach and DungeonMaster.

The best of luck in your new enterprise. It's a damn shame you are starting with an imposed handicap from the feds and distributors. Still bound and determined to support you.

EMOTIONAL OUTBURST

Congratulations on the best coverage for the community and best wishes for a smooth and empowered transition of ownership and production to Desmodus, Inc. I've been a member of DM since my awakening into leather and SM through my first Master. Are they still to be dual magazines?

The professional columns and advice of DM are superb and I'd not willingly give it up, as this "slave-trainee" has much to learn and/or experience. Pardon my outburst of willful expression, but...

Please make editorial assertion to notify your devoted audiences.

G.D.
Pomona, CA

(Ed.: Not to fear, DungeonMaster and Drummer will remain separate and individual publications. Desmodus, Inc. plans format and editorial content changes in both, Drummer and DungeonMaster.

Drummer will remain a monthly magazine and our major priority, but we will definitely not let DungeonMaster be lost in the shuffle. It will be upgraded to a more magazine-like look, will at least double in number of pages per issue and will become, officially, a quarterly, alternating publication dates with Mach and FQ. The new DM cover price will be $4 per issue, $15 for a four-issue subscription. DungeonMaster will remain the "professional" magazine, while Drummer will continue with its action-fantasy-SM content. Drummer will be updated with new material, stories, articles, photos and artwork by new and past contributors.

Reader comments and suggestions on both Drummer and DungeonMaster are welcome. —JET)

YOU PAY FOR WHAT YOU GET

I have noted in recent issues of Drummer complaints about the increase in price of the magazine. Hey, people, don't knock it! Here in Germany the newsstand price of Drummer is 24.80 DM, or approximately $12.50, so don't worry, you're still getting a fantastic magazine at a decent price.

VENGEANCE IS MINE

As a person who has been robbed many times and almost been beaten to death, I wonder why are you against capital punishment? Using false data and arguments ("Death Penalty," Forum, Drummer 97, pg. 16) against such a purging of worthless scum, it seems you need a run-in with a hoodlum (a Reagan type) and the you'll see the light.

I got your magazine by mistake. I like other gay magazines and hoped you would be like them. Since you are not, I will not buy yours again. Try to have some class and taste by not using such filthy words and violence.

Rev. L. T.
Buffalo, N.Y.

(Ed.: The opinions expressed in Forum are those of the specific author and not necessarily those of the editors, staff or publishers of Drummer. I personally am in favor of public floggings and executions; but that is my opinion. We are each entitled to express our opinions and especially at the ballet box where such things are decided by public vote. Also, taste and class are subjective concepts. —JET)

ACCURATE MEASUREMENTS ARE IMPORTANT

Measure your penis at full erection. Wrap a piece of string around your erection about one inch from the head. Overlap the string so that you can mark both sides. Lay string on ruler and check the measurement. NOTE: If your measurement is on the border line ORDER THE LARGER SIZE.

Mameluke

by FRANK O'ROURKE

My name is Emir Abdul ibn Mohammed. I was born Toby Sanger from New York City. I am 62 and make my home on the Arabian peninsula. I have built my fortune on arms, banking and my connections with the Saudi-Arabian Royal Family.

It all began in 1943 during the invasion of Sicily by allied forces. While these armed forces swept north across the island, pockets of resistance continued while large areas had not been freed by the allies.

I became lost in the mountainous area. Traveling through brush, down steep escarpments, without seeing a single human being, I wondered if I would ever find my unit. As an advance scout, I had become lost in the past, but it never lasted this long.

As nighttime fell, I sought refuge in a cave. I gathered some brush and started a small fire to eliminate the chill. After eating my last candy bar, I cleaned a smooth spot on the floor of the cave and fell asleep.

In the morning, I felt the pangs of hunger and would have given my soul for a good hot cup of coffee. I explored the depths of the cave, hoping that I would find something to eat. Following the winding tunnel, I found myself looking down on lush fields and, nestled against the farther hill, a church spire among imposing buildings.

It took me a half hour to make my way to the buildings. I did not see anyone as I crossed the fields. The quiet was almost eerie. A small postern gate was the only breach in the high walls. I tried the handle, the gate squeaked open and I found myself in a small garden. The sweet smell of honeysuckle and wild roses assailed my nostrils and I felt a certain weakness. The smell and the hunger made me totter as I pushed the gate shut, taking in the gushing fountain, well-kept lawn and arcaded walk which followed the perimeter of the building. The silence was only broken by the fountain.

I passed through the large double doors in the center of the church. I found myself in a richly decorated church with statues in niches, the statues garbed in rich garments, wearing golden crowns that were studded with gems. Incense and burning candles clouded the precincts closest to the high altar. I could see no one.

As I approached the front of the sanctuary, I thought that I heard voices to one side. Walking toward the sound, I saw stairs which descended from the main transept. Descending into the muted darkness, I found myself standing among a group of sarcophagi. From the carved figures that reposed atop the tombs, I guessed that they were burial monuments for prelates. A light at the end of the gloom attracted me. At the end of the corridor I found a heavy wooden door which was ajar. Pushing the door open, I found a half-naked GI sitting while a group of monks stood around him.

In the light I recognized my sergeant, Abe Levine, a former member of New York's finest. Levine was not one of my favorite people. The sergeant was a bully, a thief, and a number one son-of-a-bitch.

"Sarge," I said in recognition.

"Sanger. I sure am glad to see you..."

The monks looked at me. From the light I could see that my arrival was a surprise. A door opened at the other end of the room and a man entered in a long, red robe, his face in the shadows of a cowl. The monks bowed deeply to the figure.

"What do we have here?" the new arrival asked in an Etonian accent. "You are Americans?"

I looked to Sergeant Levine for a response. The man continued to study the floor as he squatted under the new man's gaze.

"Who are you?" I blurted out in return.

"I am Fra Ricardo, Abbot of the Monastery of San Sebastiano."

"This is San Sebastiano, I take it," I said.

"Yes. Now who are you? Are you alone?"

I accepted the question at face value. "I'm lost. I was on patrol and got lost."

"Ah, yes, this is the same story that this man told us," the abbot indicated the sergeant.

I had never seen Levine in such a cowed position. In the past, I had seen the sergeant under very stressful situations and he had always managed to bluster his way out. Was the grandeur of the abbatial precincts and the abbot putting a wet blanket on Levine's usual bravado?

"Can you help us find our way back to our unit?"

"In time. In time." The abbot turned to leave, giving instructions to the monks in Italian.

Two of the monks took me by the arm and directed me toward the door where the abbot had disappeared. As I passed through the doorway, I looked back and was surprised to see the remaining monks taking the sergeant's clothing away from him while he just sat there watching me.

We followed a cobblestone passageway. From the looks of it this must have been the lower part of the medieval castle, or the dungeons of the Holy Inquisition. Doors lined each side of the passageway, but we were moving too fast to afford me an opportunity to look into them. One door was opened and the monk directed me into the room. It was pitch black and I hesitated on the inside and started to back out. Before I could move, the door slammed behind me and bolts were shot.

I was shocked by the actions of the past few minutes. Had I been taken by the Nazis or the Italian fascists? Was this a Mafia group? What the hell was going on? Where was the Army? These monks would have a lot to answer for when the troops got here.

Hours passed. No one even looked into the room. I had felt my way around, barking my shins on a steel bench in the corner of the cell. There was no bedding. The room was empty, except for the bunk and a covered bucket near the door. Hunger was making me dizzy. My throat was parched, apprehension dried out my mouth.

The door opened and three monks entered the cell. They said nothing.

"Why are you doing this?" I asked. "I'm an American. You understand, American?"

One monk held a flashlight. He handed me a black cloak and indicated with his hand that he wanted me to remove my clothing. I sensed that if I did not follow his instructions, they would not hesitate to rip the clothing off of me. Slowly, I stripped. They took my uniform and my underwear. I tried to put my boots and socks back on, but they were snatched out of my hand. The cloak was voluminous, reaching to my ankles and I was able to wrap it around me. The monk with the flashlight directed that I follow him.

The ground was warm, which surprised me. There must be some sort of heating system, but I was more concerned about what might be ahead for me.

We proceeded down the corridor and up a flight of stairs into another corridor. We stopped before a polished wooden door with a crucifix affixed to the center of the door. The leading monk threw open the door, entered and knelt as he bowed from the waist. Rising to his feet, he signaled me to enter.

I entered the high-ceilinged room which was lit by candles. The windows were covered by a broad desk. Behind it in a thronelike chair I saw Fra Ricardo, the abbot. The cowl was thrown back and his blond hair was covered by a red skull cap. He must have been in his early forties and I admit that he was a very handsome man.

"Sit," he said, directing me to a low stool in the center of the room. My escort joined us, standing behind me and at my side, making me aware that any precipitous move would be controlled.

"What's this all about," I asked. I could not understand what was happening.

The abbot raised his right hand to silence me. A heavy gold ring shone in the candlelight. "You will never speak again without permission. Do you understand that?"

"Yes, sir," I responded. My military training had taught me to obey authority.

"Good. Remember it, because if you disobey, you will be punished."

Standing, the abbot began to pace behind the desk as he began to address me. "You will answer a number of questions. I will not ask you any military questions which you are adjured not to give out. We are neither Nazis or members of the Mussolini government. We are loyal sons of Holy Mother Church. Do you understand?"

"Yes, Sir," I said with a degree of relief, since I knew that I was now safe in the arms of the Church.

"We don't rip you off, we get you off!"

"What is your name?"

"Toby Sanger."

"Age?"

"Nineteen."

"Religion?"

"Well, none, I guess. My folks are Episcopalians."

The Abbot smiled in a pleased way. "Are you married?"

"I'm engaged to a girl back home."

"Where is home?"

"New York."

"Did you know Sergeant Levine before?"

"Yes, sir. He's in my company."

"Are you friends?"

I hesitated. Levine was a bastard, but I didn't want to rap him to this stranger. "Not really."

"We will get into that later," the prelate said as he came around to the front of the desk. "Stand and clasp your hands behind you."

A pair of arms reached around me and loosened the clasp which held the cloak together. The cloak was swept from my body. The baring of my body before this priest caused me to cover my genitals with my hands. The abbot's hand lashed out and slammed me in the side of my head. "Hands behind you, slave."

The word 'slave' shocked me more than the blow. With some effort I gripped my hands tightly behind me. I had been naked a number of times with other men since I entered the service and that did not bother me. I had reacted because of the religious authority the man held. What did he mean by calling me a slave?

"Turn around," the Abbot ordered sternly.

I turned and faced the monks behind me. Their faces did not give me any clue as to what was happening.

"Bend over and grasp your ankles."

Like an automaton, I did as I was ordered. Some device prodded at my rectum, causing me to grit my teeth. I expected that at any moment I would awaken from this nightmare. A hand stroked my buttocks. A chill coursed up my spine, causing the hair on the back of my head to stir.

"Take him."

The monks at my side grasped my arms while the third one held the door open. The Abbot's voice followed me into the hall. "Obey in everything you are told to do, or you will be punished."

In a dazed state I allowed my captors to lead me naked down the hall. We did not return to the basement. Instead we headed for another wing. My hunger was beginning to reassert itself.

"I'm hungry. Will I be fed?"

The monks did not respond. Whether it was a language barrier or they did not want to communicate, I couldn't guess.

I was led into a large chamber and my eyes almost popped. I found Sergeant Levine and four other men chained to various parts of the wall. All of the men were naked. All had some sort of contraption attached to their testicles with weights hanging from the ends.

A hairy monk with a massive black beard came forward and exchanged words with my guards. The new monk directed that I be taken to the farther wall where he very quickly manacled my hands above me. Kicking my legs apart which put a strain on my arms, the monk attached shackles to my ankles. Going over to a sideboard, he returned with a leather harness and bent down in front of me. He pushed my cock to one side as he gripped my ball sac, stretching it down. The manhandling and abuse to my balls caused me to groan from the pain and humiliation. Excepting the doctor who had examined me in the induction center, I could never remember another man touching my private parts.

After the light weight had been attached, I thought that I would faint from the pain. My balls were always very sensitive.

I knew now that something terrible was going to happen to me, something that I would never have believed was possible in my worst nightmare.

DRAGONS AND ANGELS

Why is it when I travel West I find myself hanging by my heels and whipped, whereas at home in the East I find myself standing over a submissive stud who polishes my boots with his tongue? Do my sexual stripes change during these migrations? In the alchemy of SM, by what process am I transmuted from slave to sadist, or from Master to masochist? How is the lead of pain changed into the gold of pleasure? For the majority of the right-thinking citizens, the world of fetishism, bondage and SM is marked off as the twilight zone on their mental and moral map of the world. The inhabitants of that hinterland can be branded as perverts, or even as fascists. In days gone by, when the world was thought to be flat and folks feared sailing over the earth's edge into hell and chaos, there were regions uncharted except by this warning: There be dragons.

I wandered into those regions by chance as a child, when a dragon appeared to me in the form of an older schoolmate. Each spring the choirboys of St. Thomas Choir School spent two weeks at a country camp, and during one such sojourn this older boy asked me to take a walk with him into the woods. When we were sufficiently distant from the cabins, he asked me to strip naked for "a game." He teased and cajoled, I laughed and demurred. Finally, willingly seduced, I stood bare-skinned, my nipples pouting with puberty and my cock stirring, not knowing what would come next. He pulled a length of rope from his pocket and I felt a flash of fear. But we both smiled, and he proceeded to wrap the rope around my torso and the trunk of a tree, binding my arms and legs as well. He tugged my hair and pinched and tickled me, repeating again and again that I'd been "captured." Now and then he would withdraw some distance simply to gaze at me, a boy bound naked to a tree.

And now and then he and I would laugh or speak simply to break the silence, the intensity of this secret we had created, to establish again that this was only a game, and that we were only playing. For me, it was one more early understanding that there are games which can be played seriously. I did not name our game with any words from the lexicon of shrinks and sexologists, but I did know we had ventured into forbidden territory. Terra Incognita—there be dragons. Our game was interrupted by schoolmates approaching through the woods. In a panic, he fumblingly untied me, and I fumblingly dressed.

If I cared to place this childhood game in the perspective of psychopathology, it would be easy to trace my present full-blown fleurs-du-mal to these early roots. I, too, can spin out certain theories which explain everything—and nothing. Instead, I'd rather tell stories, and some happen to be true. A few true short stories, which it may please some to read as true confessions.

I grew up in Puerto Rico and Argentina, and have since spent most of my life in the East of the U.S. Much of my youth was spent in the company of earnest Quakers and political activists, people fired with ethical and intellectual passion. Too much of my youth was spent in the company of leftists who were and are sexual and cultural dinosaurs, people who made idols of Lenin and Castro. Our paths still cross but never converge. I was then, and remain now, an artist, anarchist, and cocksucker. All this helps explain why the path I took towards leather, SM, and other delights was so roundabout, but also why I now feel so much at home. My political background made me analytical about power, and I have an inclination toward storytelling. SM, is, in great part, a theatre of sex, death, beauty and power. Perverts, if I may use the word affectionately here, are actors who play their parts in dramas with these themes and countless variations.

Coming-out stories are an especially gay genre. Coming out as a cocksucker was, for me, precisely that: I felt that a hidden being was defying enforced privacy, and claiming the public world. But coming out as a leather guy was something quite different for me: It was not so much a coming out as a going in. I did not grow up having masturbatory fantasies about fisting, watersports, whips, tit clamps and handcuffs. My interest in these and other pleasures was an acquired taste, and the magnetism was at first mental. Debates were raging among gays and feminists about pornography, sex and power. I detected a definite dogmatism and puritanism among people who regarded themselves as progressives. They were especially hostile to the leather scene and SM. Naturally, I was moved to take a closer look at both.

At the same time, I was disgusted that some feminists (not all) were no better than far-right fundamentalists when it came to leading censorship crusades. I became friendly with a number of wild women who are writers and sexual radicals. Pat Califia, Gayle Rubin, Dorothy Allison, Susie Bright and others have been generous enough to acknowledge their debt to the sexual culture of gay men, and gay men like myself are in turn grateful to these lesbian feminists. It should be noted that all four were present at the first Living in Leather conference held recently in Seattle, splendidly organized by Steve Maidhof, Washington State Mr. Leather and his organization.

A more directly erotic influence on my own sexuality was the drawings of gay artists such as Tom of Finalnd, Etienne and Rex. The cocks were impossibly engorged, the physiques were pumped up flawlessly, and the characters existed in a utopia of sexual abundance and adventure. The sex and stories could be both idyllic and sinister. Here was pornography raised to a real popular art, and here again an acquired taste became a personal passion.

Finally, a friend zipped me into my first pair of chaps and took me on a tour of Folsom. San Francisco was having a rare heat wave, so warm that night that I was able to walk about bare-chested, except for a leather harness. Within minutes of entering The Brig, a tall, dark, handsome stranger cruised me, won my trust, and took me to his place, where he fucked and paddled me cross-eyed. And every time I've gone to the West Coast since then, I've bottomed for Tops, suspended by gravity boots in a private playroom in San Francisco, and tied to a swing at a dungeon party in Seattle. In my home town of Philadelphia, on the contrary, the men I meet bottom out through the earth to China. This remains a mystery. Try to make a science from the alchemy of earth, air, fire and water. Likewise try to make a science from the alchemy of sex, death, beauty and power. Poetry is the most accurate approach.

I've told one story about a dragon in my childhood. Now here's another about an angel I encountered as an adult. I first spotted this angel in Chicago this year, later again in Los Angeles, and both times I responded to his beauty with something like fear and trembling. He has the kind of physique, black hair and blue eyes which slay me. In Philadelphia we met again by chance, and this powerful young man was seductively servile. "I want to please you," he said, a refrain repeated through our one night together. As he lay on the floor, handcuffed and spread-eagled, I burnished his butt with a paddle. Then he thrust his pelvis to take successively bigger dildoes, and finally begged for my fist. I freed his hands, scrubbed my own and pulled on sterile surgical gloves, then entered him in slow motion, a slow, deep, anal massage while he stroked his own cock.

Was he really the slave and suppliant? All his own youth, beauty and strength was laid out as a gift, and still he repeated, "I want to please you." Whatever he pleaded for was my pleasure to grant; but his pleas, coming from such an angel, had the compelling power of an annunciation. Who was active or passive in our fucking? Whose pleasure and whose power was greater? His asshole ringed my wrist, pulsing while he squeezed the juice from his plums. "Angel," I said, "you do please me."

Like most angels, he appeared and disappeared. What I'm left with are the reverberations of his power and beauty, and with no sure knowledge that I had the upper hand, my own hand gripped within his body, bound within him as surely as his own hands had been bound. He has an everyday life, as we all do. But for me he also has the extraordinary existence of Rilke's Angels. These are the first lines of Rilke's "Duino Elegies," in the Garmey and Wilson translation:

Who, if I cried, would hear me from the order of Angels? And even if one suddenly held me to his heart: I would dissolve there from his stronger presence. For beauty is only the beginning of a terror we can just barely endure, and what we so admire is its calm disdaining to destroy us. Every Angel brings terror.

And every dragon brings beauty. In the San Francisco gay parade this past June, I wore a temporary decal dragon tattoo to see how I might like to live with a permanent one. Yes, if I trusted the skill of the artist, I could live with a dragon and an angel in my body, beauty and terror together, the imaginary made real.

(Editor's note: Most safe-sex guides encourage the use of dildoes, but say that fisting is terrible and should be avoided at all cost. We feel, as does the author, that fisting, done with caution, belongs in the "possibly risky" category, along with cocksucking. A glove is the equivalent of a rubber, and if a rubber breaks, the risk may actually be greater. In the real world, most of us are still taking calculated risks and remaining responsible.

The following is reprinted from DungeonMaster 31:

"Ass play almost always results in some degree of bleeding in the bottom's intestine. This makes him susceptible to infection from the outside. Small cuts and abrasions are also often present on the hands and forearms of the Top. In fact the very activities that minimize other ass-play dangers, such as the constant trimming and filing of nails, actually increase the probability that such cuts and/or abrasions will be present on the hands. Any such openings expose the Top to contamination from the bottom's blood and fecal material.

"If one man's anatomy goes into another's ass, protect it with an impermeable membrane. Put a condom on a cock, a finger cot on a finger—or better yet use a rubber/latex glove.* If you fist, use gloves that are long enough, use a proper, uncontaminated lubricant and safe techniques. It is not a bad idea for the Top to wear gloves during heavy ass play involving handling of dirty dildoes or other toys. Protect toys that are inserted with similar membranes when possible, and make certain that they are cleaned with proper procedures when not so protected."

We encourage other readers to send in their "second-coming - out" leather/SM stories to Drummer.)

BOUND FOR GLORY

THE LOST PRINCE

PART X

by MASON POWELL

Molukenor was built of stone and wood, its rooftops steeply sloped to shed the snows, its streets narrow to save shoveling, its temples ornamented with fanciful woodcarving; all except the temple of Dworkrimian, which was built of the darkest stone the region offered and which promised nothing fanciful to either the eye or the heart. Gonar looked up at its dismal facade and wondered if ever the evil deity could be purged from the world and sent back to wherever gods are born, perhaps there to be remolded in the forge of creation and returned to the world clean.

He shivered in the chill air and wrapped the heavy furs more tightly about him. It was a good thing to have traveled and seen snow, he thought, but he was growing anxious now to return to the warm climes of Jhent. Wearing clothing for ornamentation was one thing; needing to wear it for protection against the very air was quite another!

Yet was there any hope that he would ever see Jhent again? If the High Priest of the Dwork in Jhent had got word to the temple before which he now stood, then the Prince of Jhent was truly lost, a corpse tortured to death like so many others for the amusement of the vile priesthood; a sacrifice to Dworkrimian. . . And if that word had gotten through, then his own life would be forfeit as well, for it was certain they would know him by description. A man of Gonar's size and strength was not easy to disguise.

He shook off his reverie. To think before acting was usually wise; but there were times when thought delayed action so much that hope drowned in contemplation. He had to act, and swiftly, or there would be no hope at all.

He dared not think of Fillian, who had come in his stead when he had been captive to the falconmasks. If the boy now lived neither he nor Chom nor Ketis had been able to find any trace, though they had lodged in Molukenor for more than three days while planning their attempt upon the temple.

Gonar nodded, one swift jerk of his head, and across the little open space before the temple a ragged boy with red hair approached the dark doors of the terrible place. Now Gonar's heart beat hard, for he did not willingly risk the loss of Ketis any more than he had consented to the possible loss of Fillian. He watched anxiously as Ketis pounded on the heavy doors, then cursed himself for a fool, and for being so helpless, as Ketis entered and the great doors shut behind him.

Gonar made his way slowly around the temple to where Chom waited at the back, by the cesspool into which the worshipers who failed the ordeals of Dworkrimian were dumped. In Jhent the practice was disgusting and unhealthy, but in Molukenor it was immediately dangerous, for the sewage of the temple was half frozen, the filthy ice broken only where people fell through it as they slid from the vagina-shaped exit above. Such was the theology of Dworkrimian, that one was born into a vile world to suffer and die horribly before release.

"Have you warm blankets for the boy, my Master?" Gonar asked quietly as he moved next to Chom. There was no crowd of Dworks about to jeer at those who tumbled into the ofal, but there were some who watched, and any of them might be affiliated with the temple, a possible danger to their plan.

"In the basket, by the wall," Chom said with equal discretion. "There are hot rocks to keep them warm, and I have made provision with an innkeeper nearby to replace them frequently. He thinks we are the brothers of one who has converted to the Dwork, and sympathizes."

They waited as the morning sun went higher and higher, lightening the dark streets and finally casting its white beams straight down from the zenith. Their fur cloaks and leggings kept them warm, but the sunlight on their faces made them feel human again. Gonar wondered how and why people would choose to live in a land where the air seemed always next to frost, where one's nose always tingled. They were pale people, he noted, with hair like wheat straw and eyes like sky reflected in water; and they were not given to obvious passion. They moved about their streets with much sobriety, always smiling, seldom laughing. They kept clay pots by their doorways in which flowers bloomed, but there were no verdant gardens such as he was used to.

Still, the air smelled clean and crisp, and there was a certain sweetness to it that was refreshing, provided one was not near the temple of Dworkrimian.

He noted that there were no flowers in pots near the temple, and that even the smiles of the people ceased to bloom when they approached the place. He could understand how the poor of Jhent might be seduced by the steamy corruption of Dworkrimian, but it seemed odd to him that these people, so clean of street and dress, should have allowed the deity to enter in at all.

The sun disappeared beyond the overhanging roofs at the opposite side of the street and cool dimness enfolded them again. The innkeeper of whom Chom had spoken came three times with fresh baskets of woolen blankets and hot stones, but still the pitiful rejects of the temple did not include Ketis. Gonar felt sick in the pit of his stomach, found his mind racing over a hundred plans with equally little chance of success. He wanted to speak with Chom, to rage, to cry out, to do something, but none of it was possible.

The grey shadows gathered and the sky turned dark purple and bright stars pricked their way into the firmament. The innkeeper came again with warm blankets and kindly advised them that he would wait the night, for if their brother had risen very high in the ordeals he could expect to spend the night in the keeping of the Dwork.

Gonar thought back to the vision of Fillian, hanging upside down, untended, his nipples pierced with filthy bones, his balls stretched, his mind almost broken by the horrors inflicted on him by the High Priest of Dworkrimian in Jhent. Was Ketis now enduring such treatment? How far would he have to go in order to get the information they needed?

The Molukenorian night came on and the stars grew brighter than campfires before a battle. The air seemed to crystallize, and the blond people of the town went indoors to kindle their hearths. Gonar stood like a marble carving, feeling the cold seep into him, feeling his heart start to freeze. The innkeeper came with a covered pot of hot soup, and though he did not feel like eating, Gonar downed the thick stuff to keep himself warm. Chom ate as well, but he seemed even closer to petrification than Gonar felt. Chom, after all, was a Corsair of Tillesia, and used to even warmer climes than Jhent.

The night passed more slowly than a midwinter feast in time of famine, yet still Ketis did not return to them. The sky grew grey, then mildly pink, then flamed as the sun returned. The gongs and bells of the temples of other gods sang praises, but the dark abode of Dworkrimian remained silent before them. Life returned to the city, men and women went about their chores, the innkeeper came and encouraged them, brought them food with which to break their long night fast, brought more blankets. Again the street grew light, and again the light grew dim. Gonar felt as if he had been poisoned, and realized that waiting itself was a kind of poison, though one did not drink it from a cup.

At last, as the first stars again pricked the sky, there was a cracking of ice and a splash, and Ketis floundered amid the floating filth before them. Gonar held himself back for a moment, then waded in and pulled the boy out, carrying him to where Chom waited to wrap him. They took him wordlessly back to the inn where they were staying, far from the temple, and there washed him and gave him sweet wine before they let him speak.

"The prince is still alive," Ketis related when once his teeth had stopped chattering. "He is deep within the temple, in the very chamber of the idol. It is well I lived in Rhengfel, for I should never have survived the ordeals that got me there! ... But he is alive, and it is surely the prince, for they have arrogantly set his coronet upon his head, even as he waits hopefully for death!"

"What is it they do to him?" asked Chom.

"He is suspended by his wrists over a large bronze bowl in which there are hot coals. He is at such a height that if he hangs slack, his feet will rest upon the burning coals, so to keep them from being burned he must hold his knees bent."

"He cannot do that for long," said Chom.

"Just so," said Ketis. "Thus the bowl is narrow enough that he can spread his legs and put his feet against its sides, thus resting his numbed wrists and arms at the price of a lesser burning of his feet. He is thus suspended between two tortures: the stretching of his arms and the burning of his feet. Eventually he must find his feet too much burned to bear touching them to the hot metal again, and his arms too painful to support him. Then will his feet touch the coals and be burned more."

"This torture," said Chom, "is one which I have heard used by the desert dwellers of the far southern continent. By such means do they extract information from their captives when they have the luxury of time. Yet it would appear these foul priests do it for sport! ... Still, if the Prince lives, the message has not got through to kill him."

"What of Fillian?" Gonar asked, no longer able to contain his concern.

Ketis averted his eyes.

"Nothing," he said. "But remember that I was not able to ask questions freely under the circumstances. He may be within the temple even now."

"Or he may not have got as far as Molukenor," said Chom. "We must not concern ourselves with him now, Gonar, my Gonar, for there is nothing yet that we can do. Let us rescue the prince. Then we shall seek Fillian."

Gonar wanted to rage, to fight, but against what? His Master was right. There was naught to do but rescue Prince Hrendel and accomplish what they could against the evil of the Dwork.

If they had lost Fillian, then they might at least avenge him by preventing the Dwork from treating any more as they had treated him.

That night Chom bound Gonar upright to the tall posts of the bed they were provided in a private room at the inn. The treasures of destroyed Rhengfel had filled their burses amply, so they had good accommodations and the room was warm as Chom tied the last knots to hold Gonar taut. Rich tapestries depicting battles of elder days draped the walls of the chamber and a fire roared in the hearth against the wall. Fur rugs covered the big bed, but these Chom pulled off and piled on the floor at Gonar's feet.

"I will want your balls full for tomorrow," Chom said, and he ran his hands over Gonar's body, exciting him, making his big cock go stiff. Then he brought Ketis very close and kissed him, so close that Gonar could smell the spit as their mouths dripped.

This was exquisite torture for Gonar, a torture that he had grown to love; for there was nothing else that Chom could do to him without the god Wa-at taking possession of him and spoiling it. He watched hungrily as Chom licked down the boy's raw body, ran his tongue over the welts where the priests had whipped him, sucked on the balls that the priests had tortured. All so close, all the distance of a tongue away, yet all unattainable. The clear juices began to drip from Gonar's dick in a long string and he flexed his big muscles, wanting, knowing he would not get, wanting more.

Chom turned Ketis around and bent him over. He pushed his tongue into the rosy young asshole, made the boy groan with pleasure. When Ketis reached for his cock, Chom grabbed his hands and prevented him. He pulled Ketis upright, held the boy's hands against his chest, and with his arms around the freckled white body he slowly pushed his big dark prick up into the tight hole. Then he started to slowly and lovingly fuck Ketis, a long, gentle fuck to drive away the memories of the unfeeling fuckings that the priests had given him.

It was a long time that Gonar watched, a long time that he gasped with desire, fighting involuntarily against his bonds. The fire had died down before Chom spurted up the boy's ass, then laid him on the fur rugs and fucked his mouth for a while. When Chom finally lowered his lips to Ketis's young pink cock and sucked it, Ketis was well past the horrors of the day, had forgotten whatever had been done to him out of cruelty. He thrashed with unbridled pleasure and shot into Chom's mouth, his seed spillin' out and down into Chom's neatly trimmed black beard like white pearls.

Chom left Gonar tied, but wrapped him in furs against the final dying of the night fire. Then he and Ketis curled up in the bed and slept.

His eyes began to adjust to the light and shapes appeared. He was being led into the sanctuary. There, in the dim light of orange oil lamps, stood the huge veiled effigy of Dworkrimian.

---

The next day Gonar presented himself as suppliant at the temple of Dworkrimian. He knew not what to expect, for he had endured half the ordeals before, and Ketis, who who had been trained as a pleasure slave in Rhengfel, had told him what to expect of the rest. He was a little mortified that a mere boy had been able to endure more at the first attempt than he had: he, the champion Shegrin of Jhent! But now he did not balk when he was made to be a temple whore and sold to the first man who had money to contribute to the Dwork.

He was a little afraid, as the priests bound him to a rack in one of the little rooms, that Wa-at might manifest in him and spoil the game: but he had fought down the god before the Rhengfel gate, under much worse circumstances, and he was sure he could do it now. He waited patiently as a tall and very handsome man of Molukenor entered the room, put down a leather satchel on the floor, and began to strip.

His purchaser was the first of the Molukenori whose body Gonar had seen, for they all wore heavy clothes that concealed their flesh. What he saw Gonar liked, for the man was well muscled, tough of limb, with a thick mat of blond hair covering his chest and a long, thick cock with a foreskin that barely covered the smooth, oval head. The man did not look at him while he made his preparations, but went calmly about his business as if it were no more than another job of grooming horses or decanting wine. He opened the satchel and took out various leather straps, bronze clamps, smooth wooden plugs and rods, and some whips.

Gonar felt his cock stiffening, knew that his balls were filling with juice despite their emptying in earlier ordeals. He relaxed, knowing that he would enjoy whatever happened to him now despite the whoredom of it.

He did not expect the sharp blade that the man brought out of the case last, and which the man examined closely by the light of an oil lamp. Nor was he capable of relaxing further as the man came to where he was stretched out and looked him over. He had been too close to castration in recent times for fear to be far from his thoughts. The man reached down and hefted his balls, got a curious look in his eyes when he saw the scars on Gonar's prick and nuts, but reached no further. He let go the heavy sack, stroked the cock a couple of times, then brought the knife up under Gonar's armpit.

Gonar knew how quickly it was possible to die if the big veins under the arm were cut. It flashed into his mind with the suddenness of summer lightning that they might know who he was after all, that his entry into the temple might be a trap. But he clenched his teeth together, ready to die silently if they were about to try him for information about his friends.

The sharp bronze touched his skin, he sucked in a tiny breath. Then the blade began to scrape, cutting away the hair in his armpit.

There were men in many lands who shaved away the hair from their chin, and women who shaved it from their bodies, sometimes in patterns. But Gonar had never desired to have it shaved from his body: and that was precisely what this tall blond man was doing! With deft care he scraped away the hair first from one pit, then the other, then proceeded to removed all the hair from Gonar's chest. It was a bizarre feeling, not only because of the closeness of the knife but because of the way the skin felt afterward. The man was careful to run his hand over the freshly shaved area each time he finished, just to make sure Gonar knew that feeling.

The blade moved down Gonar's belly, then stripped away the pubic hair around his cock and balls. It moved deftly over his balls as well, the man holding them stretched taut as he performed the curious operation, then the knife moved up the hard shaft of Gonar's cock, taking the last hair that grew up to it and leaving him completely smooth.

The man seemed totally absorbed by what he did, moving next down Gonar's legs and shaving them smooth. His cock was partly hard as he worked, but it did not drip with passion as Gonar might have expected. Gonar wondered what kind of pleasure the man was deriving from the rite, but it was not his to question, only to be object for that pleasure. He began to sweat a little when the man moved the knife to his face and shaved off his beard, his moustache, then his eyebrows as well. Finally, the knife was applied to his head and his curly black locks were shorn, leaving him bald.

The rack was so constructed that it was a simple matter for the man to flip him over and take what remained off his ass and the backs of his legs: then there was no hair on Gonar's body but the slight length of his eyelashes. The man seemed to feel it unnecessary to remove them, and at last Gonar relaxed, for he did not relish the idea of the knife near his eyes.

Still without speaking the man took a wooden plug from his inventory of toys and pushed it slowly up Gonar's asshole, stretching the sphincter in a way that was painful yet not so harsh as to cause splitting. He took a wooden plug the size of an apple and put it into Gonar's mouth, then secured it there with a thong around Gonar's head. He flipped the rack over again, so that Gonar was on his back, then he took a slim wooden rod and worked it into Gonar's piss slit.

Gonar groaned at this invasion, but he noted that the wood was smooth polished, presumably so as not to leave splinters.

Now the man left him for a moment and returned to the satchel. From it he drew a bottle and a metal cup, and from the bottle he poured liquid into the cup. Gonar thought back to the fiery oil that Chom had pushed up his ass, slid up his prick, and the drugs that had been put into him through his cock and his asshole by the falconmasks. He knew that he could endure such things again but he did not want to. Yet he didn't groan or show fear. It was better to let the man proceed: a show of fear might make his torturer focus on that one technique.

The tall blond man held the cup of liquid over the flame of the oil lamp, letting it heat. It took a long while and he swirled it occasionally to make sure it heated evenly. Gonar knew that time was a part of the torture, the time that he had to contemplate what was coming next. The man was using time quite well.

When the stuff was hot the man brought it to Gonar's side and without preamble began to drip it in little splashes on the newly shaved areas of his chest.

It was scalding and it burned! Gonar cried out, bit the wooden gag, thrashed. The man smiled and continued to splash the hot oil on him, making it fall on his tits, tossing some into his armpits, finally moving down his chest toward his belly. Then the cup was empty. The man returned to his bottle and refilled it, then went to the lamp again.

So this was it! Gonar thought. He would watch the cup being refilled, be scalded with the oil, watch again.

And so it was: first the oil on his chest, then in his armpits, then down his belly. Then it went to his head, over his raw bare scalp, then on his face, so that he had to shut his eyes and he could no longer watch, only wonder when the hot oil was coming. He was turned over again and the hot oil fell on his legs, on the backs of his knees, on his ass. Then he was turned one final time and the scalding oil fell first on his cock, then on his shaved and tender balls.

Next the whips came into play.

Broad whips first, with flat strips of leather that landed across his chest, his belly and his legs like multiple belts. Then narrower whips that bit in, a cutting pain. Finally thin whips, almost hair whips, that landed on the raw flesh like lines of fire. He cried and whimpered into the wooden gag and thrashed against his bonds, and the man turned him over, began anew with the broad whips on his shoulders, legs, butt, then the thinner whips, then the hair whips. His flesh ached. He knew that every stroke showed on his bare skin. He knew the subtle difference that was made by taking away the hair, the small protection that it offered.

At last the man pulled the wooden gag from his mouth and shoved his half-hard cock in. Gonar sucked, sucked furiously, with complete abandon. He made the cock in his mouth hard, tasted the sweet precum as he teased its pisshole, wanted more.

This man was good, this man tortured with the sure hand of an accomplished Shegrin. Gonar desired him.

The man pulled his cock free of Gonar's mouth, went down the rack, slid the plug from Gonar's asshole, then shoved the hard cock in. He began to fuck Gonar, long steady strokes that pushed all the way in, that filled Gonar's bowels in a way the wood had not. He kept it up a long time, wearing Gonar's asshole raw, making him want to scream, to cum, to go out of his body with the intensity of it, the steadiness of it, the timelessness of it.

Finally, Gonar felt the hot spurting of the prick deep within him, felt the man slacken, spent; go partly soft. He felt the cock slide out of him. He waited, wondering what was next.

The man came to the front of the rack, held his big prick in his hand, then pissed in Gonar's face. Gonar lapped at it, tried to get some in his mouth, tried desperately to please the man. The man played the yellow stream back and forth, keeping Gonar from catching more than a little. When he was finished he shook the last at Gonar's face, then wordlessly got dressed and left.

Gonar lay stretched and breathless, the smooth wooden rod still in his dick, his balls full and ready to explode. When the priests came for him, they laughed as they untied him. He reached for his dick immediately, slid the wooden rod out and shot his load.

They laughed at him more, made him lick it up, then took him to a room lined with plain wooden benches to await the next ordeal.

As Gonar sat on the wooden bench, it occurred to him that not once had he felt the presence of Wa-at attempting to invade him, to take possession. Not in all the ordeals he had offered! Did that mean the god had finally abandoned him? Or was it only that he was now in the temple of another deity? Was Dworkrimian so powerful that Wa-at could not enter here?

That thought sobered Gonar greatly, for he had seen the volcano god destroy a city. It was not a pleasant thought that Dworkrimian might be strong enough to resist Wa-at. Yet it was because Gonar had sworn enmity against Dworkrimian that Wa-at had taken him.

Other supplicants were brought and left on the wooden benches and Gonar looked them over, even as they eyed him. They were exhausted, as well they might be, but there was a brightness in most of the faces he saw that showed the lust of the fanatic. These people were here because they wanted to be, because they liked what was happening to them. There could be no quarrel with either their tastes or their morals, only their judgment. . . At least from Gonar's point of view. But he knew that they would show him no such tolerance if they were given the chance, for their belief was in a single "true" deity, and their intent was to conquer the world for their foul faith.

At last the priests came and took him into the next chamber, the one with the round firepit and the crosses facing inward. The chamber which he had used to torture the High Priest in Jhentfel. There was no fire in the pit as yet, but Ketis had told him what to expect. He was bound to a cross, his arms tied tightly, his ankles bound so that his feet would be very near the fire when it was kindled. Then they left him and brought in the next man.

When the crosses were full, two priests piled wood in the middle of the pit then heaped it with charcoal. They lit the fire, made sure it was blazing, then left. It was not close enough to burn the victims hanging on the crosses, but it was hot, and Gonar knew it was only the beginning. He waited as the fire got hotter, as the temperature of the room soared, as the sweat poured from his shaved and whipped body. His hands went numb, then his arms. A man with brown hair across from him started to moan and his cock went hard. Gonar felt his own dick get stiff, and soon all the other cocks were hard as well. He remembered someone telling him that if a room were filled with naked men one cock would eventually go hard, and that if it did, they would all get hard out of sympathy. His neck began to ache and he rotated it. He clenched his fists but there was no feeling.

The fire blazed and the charcoal burned and the big fire became a pile of coals. Gonar thirsted but he knew there would be no quenching for a long time. A single priest returned and raked the glowing coals outward, spreading them evenly around the circle so that they were directly beneath the crosses. The searing heat reached up for Gonar's feet, made them hot, cooked them, made them hurt. The priest left.

After a while a man crucified to Gonar's left began to cry out, then to scream. A priest appeared and he was taken down from the cross, dragged across the room, and thrown into one of the omnipresent pits. Gonar could picture him falling into the frozen filth, could picture him being relieved at the coldness, then trying to walk out with his feet so burned. It would be painful, but as Ketis had shown, it would not last. None of this pain was meant to last, only to break men's wills.

Gonar sweated and ached and his eyes burned with the fumes of the charcoal, but he endured. Three more men broke and were ejected, then the remaining four hung silent as the coals died. Hot time passed, how long he did not know, then priests came in again and he was taken down from the cross.

He could barely walk as they took him into the next chamber, telling him as he went that the path of the Dwork was a painful one to walk. He almost laughed at that, so much did his feet hurt, but he kept silent, knowing they would be offended if he did not take their mouthings seriously.

The next room was the torture chamber in which he would spend the night, the room like the one in which he had found Fillian. Here the tortures would become individual, a matter of the priests' fancy. The several who surveyed Gonar were bemused with what to do with him, for he was clearly among the most splendid specimens they had ever seen. Several of them argued about it, for the scars on his cock and balls, and in his palms and on his feet, showed him to be tough. They settled at last upon what they called "the torture of the grave," a thing about which Gonar knew nothing until they did it to him, and then which he thought too easy: until it was done.

They opened a box and took out strips of linen. He was sat on a low table and two of the priests began to wrap the linen tightly around his feet, then up in a spiral around his legs. They wrapped it around his buttocks but left his cock and balls free, then tightly around his belly, his loins, his chest. They told him to take a deep breath as they wrapped his chest, for they wanted him to be able to breathe.

They took more strips and started at his hands, wrapping them flat and tight so that he could not bend them nor even move the fingers. They wrapped his arms, his shoulders, then took the linen down his chest, so that he was covered except for his head and his genitals.

They stood him up and put his legs together, then began wrapping the linen around them both. They put his arms at his sides and wrapped the linen around and around, so that his arms were bound tightly at his sides. An older priest took his balls in hand and squeezed them, then stroked his cock until it was hard. Then they started at his neck and wrapped upward.

They put a large, flat stone in his mouth, so that he could not move his tongue, and they wrapped his jaw tightly shut. They wrapped over his mouth, left his nostrils open, placed flat leather pads over his closed eyes, then wrapped over them. His head was completely encased in the linen, and still they wrapped, around and around, working down his body again.

Gonar felt dizzy, was unable to balance, almost fell; but they caught him. He felt them put pads over his ears and wrap more. The world became more and more muffled, and he got hotter and hotter. Again he felt his balls squeezed, hard, and his cock stroked. At last there was nothing but his cock, the smell of the men near him, his balls, and the inside of his mind. He felt them lift him, lay him down, and then all was still.

It took a while for him to understand the torture, but understand it he did. His nose began to itch. His fingers began to cramp. He tried to flex his muscles, but there was not enough room in the bandages to do that. It was, indeed, a torture of the grave, for his body was held as still as death. He concentrated on his cock, knowing that it was exposed to further torture, and it became stiff. He waited for something to happen but nothing did.

His mind went back to that time when Chom had bested him in the arena and he understood fully. It was again the mind game, the prospect of waiting for an unmeasured time that was the torture.

... But he was Gonar of Jhent, the Champion of Jhent in the sport of Shegri, and he had already lost once to this particular imposition. Had he been able to smile in the tightness of the bandages he would have. He pulled his mind back from the present, ran down the many corridors of memory until he was tired of reliving pleasantries, and then—he slept.

Gonar awoke with a hard-on and the distinct feeling of a knife blade caressing his balls. He tensed, remembering where he was and how helpless, and that the High Priest in Jhentfel had intended to kill Fillian. The blade moved lightly up and over, then up the underside of his cock. The fear, the danger, made Gonar's dick get stiffer, and he felt a fool for his response. The blade rested against his piss slit and remembered Chebid mutilating the impaled councilmen of Throm.

The blade moved down the top side of his shaft, then the point touched just at the base, as if to be driven in right above his cock. With the big flat stone in his mouth he could not even swallow.

The knife slipped in under the linen strips and began to cut the cloth, upward toward his chest. In a moment it was at his throat, then up his chin, touching his lips, his nose, between his eyes. The encasing linen was peeled back and the leather pads taken from his eyes. Through his eyelids the light was painful. The cloth was pulled from his head and he was lifted upright. The cloth was pulled down over his shoulders and the knife slit the wrappings on his arms. In moments he stood, still blinded, naked, his body feeling newborn in its hairless nakedness. His cock was still hard.

He heard someone gasp.

"What is it?" an unfamiliar voice asked.

"Nothing!" snapped a second voice, but this was a voice Gonar knew. "Take him to the next room. I was only impressed by his body. I shall enjoy whipping him!"

Gonar tried to open his eyes and confirm what his ears told him but it was too painful. Yet he had no doubt that the voice belonged to Fillian!

His arms were jerked behind him and bound. A thong was tied tightly around his cock and balls, then he was yanked along. His eyes began to adjust to the light and shapes appeared. He was being led into the sanctuary. There, in the dim light of orange oil lamps, stood the huge veiled effigy of Dworkrimian.

At one side of the chamber he saw a tall tripod set up over a metal bowl of embers, now cold after the long night. From the tripod hung a boy wearing a coronet. It was as Ketis had described: he was in the presence of the lost prince. The boy had his father's face, still softened by youth, but he had his mother's coloring, his hair tending to auburn rather than either black or red. The burned feet now hung among the dead coals, and the eyes were closed in a merciful unconsciousness that would not last once the priests took note of him.

Yet of more interest to Gonar at the moment was the assembly of priests, for among them was his beloved Fillian.

A second's eye contact told him the situation, and he knew to show no more. It was as it had been in Rhengfel with Chom. Fillian was now the Master and he but a supplicant. How things would fall out was a matter for the boy to decide.

Others were brought in who had hung in torture for the night. There were only two. Presumably the third had failed. They were lined up before the idol, facing it, then three priests, including Fillian, went to the antechamber where the whips and bonds were kept. They returned with metal-barbed whips of the most cruel kind and stood, each before a supplicant, Fillian before Gonar.

A man stepped forward whom Gonar took at once to be the High Priest of this temple. He spoke to them sternly, and his voice carried authority such as men should not have. They knew him to be a Master of life and death, and Gonar at least denied him that right in his heart.

"You have come to the ninth ordeal, and you must know the truth that accompanies it. If you succeed here you will be considered ready to offer your lives to Dworkrimian. If you do that, then all the privileges of the priesthood will be yours, some of which you can guess. If you do not succeed, you will be cast into the pit from which you must crawl up again, as you may have before."

He paused before continuing.

"These men will whip you, will scourge you with pain greater than you have yet known. If you cry out, you will be rejected. If you take the pain, you will be allowed to make an offering to the True God. That offering will be your left testicle. I will cut it out of your sac and it will be cast into the dark pit under the idol from which there is no retrieval. After that you will be allowed to return to this chamber at will, that you may freely worship the One True God."

As he said this the three priests opened their robes and spread their legs, and showed that what was said was so. Gonar felt sick as he saw that one of Fillian's balls was missing.

"More than that," the High Priest continued, "the one ball you keep will be always in the service of the True God. You will never touch your cock again, but always be serviced by supplicants. If you give yourself pleasure, you will be punished, even as you have punished a priest in your ordeals; for all must fail so long as they live. And more than that, if you should leave the service of the Dwork, you will lose the other ball against your will. Knowing this, will you dare the ordeal, or be cast out now?"

Gonar swallowed. This was madness. Better to leave now if he were sane. Yet the plan that he had prepared with Ketis and Chom might save him, and besides, there was now Fillian to be rescued as well as the prince who hung in agony nearby. He kept silence and nodded. Then he looked Fillian straight in the eyes, hoping the boy could give him something.

Fillian stared, his eyes saying nothing.

The other two men also nodded.

The three priests raised their barbed lashes and began the whipping, hard across the chest, the metal tips biting in. Gonar nearly screamed with the first of it, for his flesh was tender from the cooking on the cross; but he kept his silence, held on and made of the pain a love offering from the boy whom he had rescued. His mind raced, trying to escape the agony by filling in pieces, seeing Fillian's desperate attempt to get access to the prince, seeing the boy offer his nut in order to gain the priesthood.

The lashes cut his belly, his legs, snapped like shark's teeth at his cock, which even now was hard. Fillian began to move around in a circle, beating his shoulders, his ass, making what was left of him into raw meat. Gonar jerked and gasped under the assault, hoping desperately that one of the other men would break. Perhaps that would put an end to the ordeal, he thought.

But it was not so, and the others proved as tough as he was! Eventually the whipping stopped.

The High Priest came forward with a leather case and opened it. Inside was a sharp ritual knife.

"Hold the first one!" the priest commanded, and two priests seized the man who stood to Gonar's left.

"Spread his legs!"

Two more priests held the man's legs wide. Gonar could not help but watch. The man was white with fear, but he did not cry halt. The priest approached him, took his balls in hand, brought the sharp knife close. The man's cock was stiff as stone. Gonar felt his body pouring sweat, as did that of the victim of the sacrifice.

The knife sliced the man's scrotum, just slightly, above the ball that hung in it.

"Uuunnnnnnhhh!"

Thick white jism throbbed from the end of the man's dick, all over the priest's hand, even as the priest squeezed slightly and popped the round pink testicle out and into a ritual cup.

Another priest appeared with a bone needle and silk thread, and as the man shook, he sewed the small wound shut.

The priests who had seized him let the victim go and he staggered, but he held his feet. The High Priest handed him the cup.

"Make your offering!"

The man staggered forward and with a look of sublime horror hurled his own testicle into the pit under the covered statue of Dworkrimian. Then he collapsed. Two of the priests seized him under the shoulders and dragged him back to his place in the line.

"The next one!" the High Priest instructed.

Two strong men grabbed Gonar's arms.

Where were Ketis and Chom? he wondered desperately. The plan was for them to enter the temple by different means, Ketis as one who had won his way to the inner chamber (but who had cried out under the lash) and Chom up the chute from the cesspool exit. Had they both somehow failed? Must he go through with this because they were late? There could be no second chance in this matter.

"Spread his legs!" the High Priest commanded.

Gonar felt his legs pulled apart, was painfully conscious of his naked sack hanging down, of his shaven cock standing up. He knew that the primal fear and terror he felt would make him shoot as surely as it had the man before him. He did not want to lose even one of his balls—and yet, now with it so close, there was a terrible fascination. Even as there had been that night he had offered both his balls to Chom.

The High Priest took his nuts in hand, stretched them downward. The knife touched.

"Halt!" came Chom's voice from behind him, and Gonar knew that Chom was hurling himself out of the other pit, the one that led to the cesspool, hurrying to his rescue.

The knife cut.

Ahhnnnnnn! Gonar groaned as he felt the High Priest squeeze, felt his left nut pop out of his sack, felt the cum boil up out of him painfully, spurting with a force of fear and terror he had never known. As if from the heights of a tall cliff he looked down at his shaven groin and saw the white sperm, saw his pink testicle plop into the little ceramic cup.

Suddenly the High Priest was jerked back. Still thrashing from his orgasm, Gonar saw his testicle on the grey stone amid broken pottery, saw booted feet scuffle near it.

"Put it back in and sew it shut, or the High Priest goes into the pit!" Fillian's voice snarled, and Gonar looked up and saw that the boy priest now held the High Priest with a knife at his throat.

There was a moment of silence, then Fillian pressed the knife he held harder and the High Priest said: "Do it!"

In amazement, Gonar watched as one of the priests picked up his ball, dusted it like a piece of food that has fallen to the floor, then pushed it back in through the little incision in his scrotum. The priest with the needle stitched it shut.

Gonar began to feel the pain of what had happened to him, but there was no time for it to develop.

The door to the chamber burst open and Ketis entered, a long, thin sword in one hand, a short bow held drawn in the other.

"Don't move, or I will kill the High Priest!" Fillian repeated.

"Why should I care?" asked Ketis, clearly puzzled.

Gonar realized through the haze of pain that was boiling up from his groin that Ketis and Fillian had never met.

"He's one of us!" came Chom's voice, and Gonar managed to turn his head a little and see that Chom was taking Prince Hrendel down from the tripod. He wanted to vomit.

"All of you priests, and you, new initiate to a fool's god; lay down on the floor on your faces!" Fillian's voice was no longer that of the boy Gonar had rescued. Whatever he had endured since their parting, he had learned authority. "Now, you," he said to the surprised Ketis, "bind their hands and feet tightly behind them."

Gonar felt himself stagger as the men who held him let go and followed the orders of the boy who had moments before been one of them. He stood still, not daring to move, as Ketis followed Fillian's directions, binding the priests with strips torn from their own robes. Chom had Prince Hrendel free now, but the prince was in no condition to move on his own. His eyes were open, but he stared blankly as he hung limp in Chom's arms.

"Now, you, down!" commanded Fillian, and in moments the High Priest was bound as were the rest.

"Why does Dworkrimian allow this?" demanded the bound man who had just thrown his ball into the pit. "Where is the power of the True God?"

Gonar pitied the man even as he ached, and was grateful to have escaped the same fate.

"Ketis," said Chom, "I will entrust the Prince to you, for you know where the horses and wagon await us. If we do not follow—"

"Why should you not?" Ketis asked, taking the prince under his arms and moving toward the pit that lead down to the cesspool.

"Gonar cannot go down into that filth with his sac cut open. The infection would kill him. We will have to fight our way out."

"There are other ways," said Fillian, stripping off the hateful black robes of the priesthood. "The important thing will be to keep his balls clean, and I can do that with my mouth."

Chom looked at the boy with new respect.

"Why, just so," he said. "But then, my mouth will do as well."

"We may need your sword arm more," said Fillian. "Let me perform this service for my Master."

Something new came into the room, something generated suddenly of the love the four men felt for each other. It kindled from Fillian, moved to Chom, enwrapped Gonar, reached out for Ketis, whom Fillian knew only as a new partner in their enterprise. Gonar felt it like a flame against the snow.

"So be it!" said Chom.

They helped Gonar to the edge of the pit and he watched Ketis slip in. They waited long enough for him to have righted himself in the icy floating filth below, then they slid Prince Hrendel in, a limp, staring emptiness of flesh. They positioned Gonar on the rim of the pit, then Fillian wrapped himself around Gonar, his legs around Gonar's chest, his arms around Gonar's thighs. The boy took Gonar's balls gently in his mouth, sucked so that they were sealed within, then took a deep breath. Chom pushed them slightly and they fell, down the long, greased chutes, bumping, colliding, falling finally out the vaginal port and down into the icy waters of the cesspool.

Gonar struggled to get his feet under him, knew that he must do it quickly, for Fillian could only hold his breath for so long. He waddled through the filth as best he could, fighting off the pain, half walking, half swimming, acutely conscious of Fillian's face in his crotch, of the fact that Fillian was upside down in the stinking offal.

Young, strong arms grappled at him, helped him, as Ketis waded back in. In moments he and Fillian lay next to Prince Hrendel on the stone stairs that lead up out of the cesspool, panting with the exertion. Fillian still held Gonar's balls tightly in his mouth. Ketis left them for a moment, then came back with cold water, which he poured all over Fillian's head and Gonar's crotch.

There was another splash in the cesspool and Chom waded out. Ketis continued washing the filth away until he adjudged it was safe for Fillian to let go, then they all climbed to their feet, except for Prince Hrendel.

Chom hefted the prince, threw him over his shoulder, and with Gonar limping, still fighting off the urge to puke, they headed for the inn. Along the way they met the innkeeper who had supplied warm blankets and he, astonished at what he saw, brought them fur cloaks against the rapidly chilling air.

It was strange to note the difference between the prince and the two boys, Gonar thought later as he lay in the back of the racing wagon next to the prince. Fillian had been given to the Dwork by uncaring parents. Ketis had been a pleasure slave. They had both survived innumerable tortures and abuses, had taken contempt as their lot, and they had come through with minds and spirits intact. The prince, on the other hand, had been raised up to rule a kingdom, with every luxury supplied, every need provided. He now lay staring blankly at the stars, his mind retreated so far into itself that they could not reach him. The training that had prepared him to rule had not prepared him to resist, had not made him fit to be ruled.

The wagon hit a rock in the road and Gonar felt an agony go through his belly, but this was not new. They were going as fast as they could, knowing that dawn would bring discovery and pursuit. Ketis drove the wagon like a madman, Chom and Fillian rode with weapons at ready lest pursuit come sooner. Gonar felt he should have been in the guard rather than in the wagon, but by now he had gained the wisdom of an individual: a sick man does best by getting well, and does not make of himself a double liability.

The moon was up, a thin scythe mowing down the year. Gonar reached over and pulled the furs more tightly around the prince, wondering if the boy would ever recover. His face was pale, and even as he stared upward, uncomprehending, the muscles of that young face twitched with the memoried repetition of the horrors he had endured.

Gonar could picture the anguish of the queen if they brought home her son in this condition, but he could not imagine what the king's reaction would be. The king was mad with the fear that his son would be horribly murdered. Indeed, the king had every reason to assume that his son was dead. How would the king feel to see his son mindless, a shell without thought? Would he then, finally, take vengeance upon the evil of the Dwork? Or would he continue to heap his enmity upon the Shegrin who were pawns in the Dwork's evil game of conquest?

Gonar hoped that the king would see reason, and scourge the temple of Dworkrimian from the face of the world. But he had seen enough of human nature that he expected the other, less sane, reaction. The king would more likely strike at those who had attempted to help, meaning Gonar and Chom and Fillian and Ketis.

It was therefore not a good idea to return the prince to Jhent if he could not be brought out of his silence.

But then, Gonar noted, this was only the first night of freedom for the boy. His mind, though observing the change in his surroundings, might yet be unwilling to admit his rescue. The boy might still be defending himself from cruel trickery. How many times might they have promised him his freedom? How many times might they have kindled his hope and then dashed it out?

Gonar moved closer to the prince, put his arms around him protectively, and spoke softly to him.

"If you can hear me, oh prince, take comfort. We have brought you out of the temple. You are no longer in the hands of those evil people. We are taking you home now, to see your father, the king, and your mother, the queen. You will be restored to your rightful place as Prince of Jhent, and then the king will destroy those people who so hurt you. Take comfort. All will be well."

He kept on whispering to the boy as the wagon hurtled along, up the steep road into the mountains, back the way they had come; away from steep-roofed Molukenor. He wished that he believed what he told the prince more completely, for then the prince might find it easier to believe. Boys had a way of seeing even well-intended lies.

Despite the banging and the bumping of the wagon, despite the periodic stabbing pain that the harsh ride caused, Gonar at last fell asleep, his arms around the prince. And when he slept he dreamed.

He was in a temple.

Not a temple of pain and terror, but a temple as it should be: a place of light and beauty, a place which humankind had erected for a meeting with the gods. There was a feast set, and at the head of the table a gilded throne was decorated with flowers. Golden utensils were set upon the table at that place, and the choicest portions of all the dishes were first cut and set upon the golden plate, the first of the best wine poured in the golden goblet.

Sweet music of strings and flutes and pipes played, and boys and girls garlanded with flowers danced for the pleasure of gods and humans. The succulent taste of the food flooded Gonar's senses, the sweet scents of the flowers filled the air. He was adrift in a sea of pleantry, and yet there was something missing, a something which he could not define.

He looked around at the people feasting and realized that they were strangers. They smiled, they were friendly, they were all beautiful; yet they were not his friends. In the midst of beauty and pleasure, Gonar felt an insufferable loneliness. He wanted those he loved to be with him, more than he wanted to be in this place of sublime comfort.

He started to rise from his place at the table, but the man next to him touched his arm and directed his attention to the gilded throne. Gonar looked, but for a moment could not see. There was a shimmering light there, a substance that was yet unsubstantial. Then, as through a cloud one gains the first glimpse of the beloved, there appeared a figure.

He was golden, as if his flesh were made of gold. He was more beautiful than anything that lived in the world. Gonar knew him at once, knew him from the safe moments of childhood, from the small offerings placed before his image on the altar. He was fierce, with the fierceness of a war-chief who defends his home and children. He was gentle, with the firmness of a father teaching his sons and daughters the things they will need to know. This was the god of his fathers and mothers, the god who was always worshiped in Jhent. This was Roghgota, whom he had half come to doubt as he grew up.

For had he ever seen the god? Had the god ever spoken to him? Had the god ever put a hand to his life directly?

At the head of the table Roghgota smiled, and his smile was as beautiful and as fierce as the withering sun of summer, too bright to be borne upon the face. Gonar turned away, ashamed that he had doubted, humble before the perfect form of everything that he wanted to be.

There was a rumbling, and the table shook. Gonar looked to the entrance of the temple, and there, glowing with the fires of the world's heart, stood Wa-at, looking around, seeking. His glowing eyes fixed upon Gonar and he stretched out his hand.

"Come!" Wa-at said. "Now you belong to me!"

Gonar looked around the table and saw that the strangers had become his friends. There sat Chom, and Fillian, and Ketis. There was Chala and her tormented brother Chebid, and next to her Lady Lharna, who had been of Rhengfel. There were all those who had been with him; all but the priests of the volcano god.

He tried to look to the head of the table, to implore Roghgota for help, but he could not. His eyes would not lift to the god of his fathers and mothers. He rose from his place, and bidding his friends farewell, he went to greet the god of the volcano.

"Hush!" came a voice from the sky. "Do not cry! All will be well!"

Gonar opened his eyes and realized that it had been a dream. Then he knew whose voice had called him back from it.

He had fallen asleep cradling the helpless form of the lost prince. Now the young prince cradled him.

There was hope after all that Jhent could be saved. □

LEATHER NOTEBOOK

by LARRY TOWNSEND

ILLUSTRATION by BILL WARD

Dear Larry,

Two short questions: 1) How long should toys and leather be exposed to a bleach solution to insure their safe use in subsequent sessions? 2) Do you know of any home remedy for ridding leathers of a urine odor?

Norm, Canada

Dear Norm,

For metal or other nonporous materials, the bleach solution should kill the microorganisms within a few seconds. For rubber or plastics (like dildoes, butt plugs, etc.) I'd let them soak for ten or fifteen minutes. For leather, I wouldn't use bleach at all, because it can cause damage. Regular rubbing alcohol works just as well. I've simply been cleaning my items with it by wiping them down with a fair amount and letting them dry naturally. If a whip draws blood, I soak it in alcohol, let it dry out in the sun, and let it lie for a month or so before using it again. I should also note that the above reference to metal objects does not refer to needles used for piercing, etc. These should be discarded, or at least never used on more than one person. Getting the urine odor out of leather is more difficult, because most things that will remove it are not good for the item. The old home remedy is tomato juice. There are also several products on the market to get "pet odors" out of carpets and furniture, but these may leave a residue which will irritate the skin. Besides, what's wrong with a little extra aroma? (Unless you intended to wear them to the opera.)

Dear Mr. Townsend,

I am in the U.S. Navy. Recently they conducted a Navy-wide HTLV-3 test, and lo and behold I tested positive. Through the Navy's program I met my daddy, who had also tested positive. Our question is: since we are both positive, is there any need for Daddy to use a rubber? And if there is, where can I find heavy-duty, industrial-strength, Jumbo-size rubbers? He has tried several brands, including the "natural" (sheepskin) rubbers, but the damned things always shred. Thank you.

B.D., East Coast

Dear B.D.,

I fear that by this time all the harm that can be done has already happened, insofar as your personal situation is concerned. However, just for the record: A person who tests positive for the AIDS antibodies is already at greater risk than someone who tests negative. Unlike most common diseases, our best evidence indicates that the AIDS virus mutates so rapidly that each exposure increases your risk dramatically. This results from the fact that your body has already produced antibodies against the particular mutation to which you were originally exposed. When struck by a second, third or further exposure, your system will eventually reach a point where it can no longer produce the requisite varieties of antibodies, and you succumb to the disease. That, at least, is one of the more popular theories. So I would answer your question with an emphatic "yes, you should use a rubber." As to your second question, to the best of my knowledge there is no such thing as "industrial strength" rubbers. (Few machines seem to require them.) There are a couple of brands (maybe more) that do come in larger sizes. Go to a pharmacy and ask for them. Then ask your daddy to use plenty of lubricant and to stop letting that big thing go hog wild when he gets it into you.

Dear Larry,

I have a problem I hope you can help me with. Next year I turn 30, and for the past few years I have been looking for a daddy. Right now I feel that my age is not helping me. Whenever I see a guy whom I consider "daddy material" (over 30, hairy, beefy-muscular, etc.) he isn't interested in me. (I'm short, stocky, with a beard.) To be truthful, if I were to find a Dad I would want to be a son, not a slave. I don't want to be kept nude in a house, wearing just a dog collar and be subjected to all that this implies. Yet I would want him to be boss, and I would be willing to do pretty much what he wanted me to—including sessions at the gym to get my body into the shape. Is there any hope for me? I just desperately want to find a dad.

Tony, NY

Dear Tony,

This seems to be "Daddy Month," doesn't it? Although most successful daddy-type relationships that I have observed seem to have started when the "son" was a little younger than you are, they frequently extend well beyond that point. And there certainly are relationships that start when Sonny is well past 30. I really don't think age is your problem. If your present appearance isn't working, why not change it? Work out, lose some weight, and shave off the beard. If it doesn't work, you can always grow it back. If you want the relationship so badly, this would seem a reasonable concession. I don't know what sort of approach you are using with your potential daddies, but you might also give this a little more thought. If you come on to a guy who is about your own age (and who may like to think he looks younger) with a big "Take me, Daddy!" you are only asking for rejection.

Dear Larry,

I have a physical problem that I can't seem to get the answer to. When I get a hard-on, my dick develops a severe downward curve that makes it difficult to use as I'd like to use it. I've been like this as long as I can remember. A nurse friend-of-a-friend told me I have something called "Peyronie's Disease." I asked my doctor about it, but he didn't seem to know what I was talking about and said I had just been circumcised too tightly. He didn't offer any solution, and in fact seemed a little uncomfortable discussing it. Can you tell me anything about it?

Arc'd in Utah

Dear Arc'd,

Again I remind you I am not a doctor. However, consulting my files I found a reference to Peyronie's Disease in a correction to an article that appeared in the Mayo Clinic Health Letter. They call it an organic disorder of the penis, and went on to note that there is medical disagreement as to whether it should be treated with radiation or not. They also seem to suspect that the condition can be brought on by certain "beta blocker drugs" (such as Inderal) which are frequently prescribed for people with heart disease and/or high blood pressure. The article in question is in the January 1986 MCHL, if you can run it down. However, my feeling is that your doctor was probably right. If you have had this problems since puberty, you may very well have been cut without enough slack in the skin of your penis. Why don't you go to a sex clinic if there is one in your area, or talk to a plastic surgeon? I should think they would be able to correct the problem.

(If you would like to have Larry Townsend address a particular problem or issue, you can write him via Leather Notebook, Drummer, PO Box 11314, San Francisco, CA 94101-1314.)

SOUTH OF MARKET BARE CHEST CALENDAR

Each year the San Francisco Eagle has a series of contests to find the best of the chests in the West. This year the monthly winners have been combined into one of the hottest leather calendars we've ever come across.

The creative photography is by Robert Pruzan, a frequent Drummer contributor, and each is worth a month's viewing. The two examples shown are Mr. April, Ron Mikkelsen and Mr. September, Joe Nucatola, who was also Mr. Northern California Drummer 1986.

All profits from the South of Market Bare Chest Calendar are donated to the San Francisco AIDS Emergency Fund and Coming Home Hospice. All twelve of these bare-chested hunks can be yours by sending $12.50 to S.F. Eagle, 398 12th Street, San Francisco, CA 94103, or pick one up when you visit the S.F. Eagle, the leather bar in San Francisco.

SAFE SEX IS GREAT SEX 1987 CALENDAR

Fantasize all you want! The Gay Chicago Magazine Safe Sex Calendar is loaded with creative photography by Jack Sitar and the late Glenn Mansfield. Depicting the safe use of toys, phone sex, voyeurism, auto-eroticism, SM and some unusual photos of what to do with whipped cream are the focus of this unique edition.

Glenn Mansfield conceived of the idea of a safe-sex calendar to remind people daily that safe sex cannot only be fulfilling but erotic. Glenn died in August of this year and the calendar is dedicated to the memory of Glenn and the nearly 14,000 men, women and children who have died of AIDS-related diseases.

The calendar contains safe-sex suggestions and reminders, along with addresses and phone numbers of AIDS information centers. The calendar sells for $10 (all sales are donated to the Howard Brown Memorial Clinic) and can be ordered from Ultra Ink, Inc., 1529 N. Wells St., Chicago, IL 60610, (312) 751-0130.

Attitude and desire to serve more important than looks. Send photo and phone in first letter. Must be willing and able to relocate. Reply to PO Box 752, Sandusky, OH 44870. (LF4958)

UNIFORMED PROFESSIONAL SEEKS SAME

I wear my uniform proudly as part of my profession and seek others who do. I am 37 GWM, 5'10", 175 lbs., who's willing to undergo training for right Master, who's head is together and who is financially stable. Most services possible for right person. Live in North Carolina but can travel. One-nighters, friends or lasting relationship all possible. Not into role-playing but simply enjoy sex and relationship where the other is in charge and insures I know it. Box 4937LF

LIFE IS PAIN SEX IS PUNISHMENT

The best sex is a brutal, violent act of hatred. Your cock is an angry weapon, charged with a boiling load of viciousness and contempt.

You: a powerful man for whom violence is as natural as breathing: choking, kicking, beating, punching and stomping are your idea of sexual foreplay. Gay, straight or bi: you are totally vicious, unrestrained, and don't give a damn for other people's notions of right and wrong. The more I scream, the more you enjoy venting your rage. Age, race and looks don't matter to me as long as you are strong enough to tear me apart with your bare hands.

Me: WM, 32, cocksucker, 5'10", 160 lbs., no stud, an unworthy subject, but an eager and discreet victim, seeking the ultimate sexual experience. Total screaming fear and excruciating, relentless torture wanted. Unbearable terror and agony are my only hard-on; orgasm is simultaneous with blinding pain. No limits, no mercy. I supply the body, you supply the pain, degradation and suffering for as long as you want. Skilled sadists into advanced/extreme torture and brainwashing only. Not into master/slave games. Not into "safe and sane" scenes; if you're not dangerous don't bother to write. Seeking a permanent, lifelong scene. Deliver me. Box 5026

FISTFUCKING BUDDIES

wanted for heavy scenes by versatile, hot, horny GWM, 31, 5'10", 160, hairy, bearded. Also into leather, W/S, S&M, VA and more. Photo to Bridwell, PO Box 7686, Atlanta, GA 30357.

HOT, HUNG AND READY

Big-dicked, 27-year-old, fun-loving dude with hot ass seeks other well-hung men for long assplay sessions. I'm 6', 165 lbs., moustache, hairy chest and very sexy. I am 5'11", 180 lbs., chunky, hairy build, 8" cut, large balls, tattooed. Write me, please, Daddy—I am eager and waiting to serve. Box 5093LF

NIPPLES BECOME ERECTILE

Shackled, tied, bound, you try to curse through a mouth stuffed with a large, soft foam ball, as torturous titclamps send twists of pain through overloaded nerve circuits. Then pleading, your cries become gasps as a toothed-parachute harness presses insistently into your encircled scrotum. Gasps become sobs as distended balls bear more and more weights. Buttocks redden, burn, & blister as an eternity of paddling swats them into tortured firmness. Your asshole, stretched from its dildo-topped perch, now yields to one larger toy after another. Then darkness. Encapsulated in isolation from sight and sound, your nerve endings flush from sensuous strokes of leather on distended testicles, even as they recoil from drip after drip of hot wax. More than yesterday's torture, less than tomorrow's. When will it end? Will you collapse before your 41-year-old GWM Daddy gives the final rubdown with hot oil and commands, "You passed, son. Cum." The tape recording of your agony will be a constant erotic reminder, if you never serve another Master. Can pay my own travel expenses within 200-mile radius of New Orleans. Will occasionally combine pain and business trips to Virginia, D.C., MD, plus Atlanta, Birmingham, Denver and West Coast. Will begin each scene by giving you complete health checkover; you'll start—and stay—healthy. Bottoms must have dungeon or playroom lined up at their own expense. Send age, height, weight, and best and worst scenes endured to date—be candid—to this ruthless, 6'4", 205 pounder at Box 5034LF. Save your pictures. You'll be interviewed before Jon Corager agrees to top you.

HOT BONDAGE BOTTOM

needs booted/gloved/leathered/uniformed top interested in training a boot licking, cock sucking asshole. I need to meet up with cops, bikers, leathermen and daddies with attitude! A mean streak and a kinky knowledge of heavy BD, heavy VA, moderate SM, hoods, gags, gas masks, enemas, boots and toys. This horny, hairy WM, 29, 6', 160, brown hair, beard & moustache needs cigar-smoking cops and leathermen to show me my place and keep me there. Will correspond. Photo for photo. Box 3711LF

TOP MEETS BOTTOM

Drummer ads get results and Ric in Eureka and Mike in Sacramento have now gotten together starting a great life together with a monogamous relationship. We would both like to thank Drummer for bringing us together. We're both believers that Drummer Classifieds get results. We couldn't be happier and hope that you too find that right man.

BODY BUILDER SON WANTED

Muscular daddy seeks son for training and service. Long-term one-to-one relationship is desired. Son will pursue body-building career along with dad and under his direction. Should have strong desire to train and the body type necessary to excel. Disciplined workouts, body worship, leather sex; all part of the package. Ideal chance to build a masculine relationship and mould a body. Photo. Box 4944LF

MASSIVE MUSCLES

Don't go to the gym, use my body for a workout! Get off on pumping up in front of the mirror using my nipples for dumbbells, my balls for cable pulls and punching bag, my face for squats and lunges! The only thing that interests you is watching yourself work out on my hapless body. The fact that I am handsome but out of shape and no comparison to you drives you to beat the shit out of me, pose before me, make me worship you. I disgust you as you overcome me with sheer strength until you verbally humiliate me. The sight of your own vein-studded body sends you into uncontrolled tit ripping, nut crushing, face slapping action until you can't do another rep. Now its time to relive all that swollen glory. Go for the burn! Sick-minded muscle jocks write, with photo. SF Bay Area only. Box 4943LF

BIG GUY—LITTLE GUYS A TURN-ON?

This little guy needs a man over 5'9" who prefers short men and knows how to use the difference in our height and strength to your advantage and our mutual excitement. With a little guy, do you ache to: pin him down, pleasure him until he screams (but not stop), win his trust over time, and then initiate him into light bondage? Do you yearn to explore and expand each other's erotic responses to D/S? Objective: monogamous, safe-sex relationship based on open communication, affection, growing together, and deeply-shared sexual needs; a relationship that won't be equal in the bedroom, but will be outside of it because you want this little guy as your partner, and not just as a sex buddy. Me: WM, boyish thirties, 5'5", 120, handsome, bearded, responsive. Likes: beach, mountains, music, candlelight dinners, cuddling, surprises. You: 30s/youngful 40s, masculine, attractive, fit, healthy, affectionate, nonsmoker, drugfree, progressive thinker. Optional: bearded, outdoorsy, artistic. Your limits respected, but both your body and mind will be slowly and safely expanded as the relationship grows. You will be totally kept and cared for in an environment that evolves into that special SLAVE/MASTER love. You will come to realize absolute trust and security in your submission. ### SONOMA COUNTY

WM, 44, 6', 190 lbs., SM, TT, C&BT, etc. No body fluids exchanged, no fucking, even with a condom. Let's use our bodies and minds. If you've got the mind, I've got the body or vice versa. Age and size unimportant as long as you can get it up! I've been into the scene for 12 years and I've done it all. For last 4 years, I've been doing what the standards say is safe sex and I'm having a wonderful time without missing anything. Do you like to play roles? Me too! I'm versatile and with our sick minds we can get it off with screams that all of the valley can hear! C'mon, invest 22¢ in your happiness and write me a note. I'm special and if you understand this ad, I'm sure you are too!!! Box 5150

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

LET'S STOP TRAFFIC

I'm 28, 6'2", 180 lbs., and above average all-around. Sound arrogant? So what. I want a Master, not a mouse in leather drag. I want commitment and trust and the envy of all who know us, or see us together. I want the best things in life. Does that mean you? If you're young, strong, healthy and find your leathersex life colder than it could be, I need you. And having said so, I'll shut up. Send photo, phone and a piece of your soul to Matt, Box 5129LF.

OBEDIENT BLOND BODY BUILDER

needs contact with dominant, aggressive man. Safe sex. Verbal abuse and humiliation. Enjoys calling the shots over 6'2", 185 (solid) lbs. jock, late 20s, blue eyes, masculine. If you're 30-50, have a mean streak and aren't afraid to show who's boss, I need badly to try to satisfy your needs. Need arrogant type who's just not happy until he's called "Sir." Photo gets mine, but attitude and temper most important. Serious. Discrete. PO Box 16813, San Diego, CA 92116. (LF5007)

HOT DADDY PUNCHFUCKER

Very hot, healthy, 52-year-old BB, 6'2", 200 lbs., clipped beard, balding, will expertly punchfuck your hungry hole. You be equally hot, hard, creative, have a tight healthy body and a sick mind. Your ass will be thoroughly used. In appreciation you will skillfully service Daddy's large nipples while dickfucking Daddy's tight ass. Reply: Daddy PF, Box 4888

SON WANTED

WM Topman-Dad, 45, 5'8", 145 lbs., seeks completely-bottom son under 30. No SM abuse, beatings or test of wills. I want a thoroughly-submissive, trim, quiet, obedient, affectionate, home-type Daddy's Boy who's on a serious, heavy, Father-Son trip. Boy can expect bondage and to be kept naked and well-disciplined. Boy will be my houseboy and not expected to work full time if at all. Be aware, I'm not a sugar daddy. I'm a Topman, a Master, aiming to possess, dominate, love, take care of, play with, and fuck a docile, dependent boy who knows he can't make it on his own and needs a Daddy. Prefer short (5'6" and under) slim, even scrawny boy with smooth body and hairless butt. This size boy not mandatory. Attitude and submissiveness more important than height. Slightly handicapped or unemployed boy okay. I'm searching for a real special kind of boy. Where is he? Reply with phone number. Relocation taken care of. Asian or Latino welcome. Box 4551LF

CUTE HUNG BLOND BOY

Want bondage, discipline and training by good-looking hung stud(s). Really like to suck cocks and be fucked long and hard! Clean and healthy. Novice, but eager to learn and serve. L.A. and O.C. Box 5126LF

SLAVE/SON/HOUSEBOY

Is there a real man that can handle all of the above? We are looking for that special person who can. You should be under 35, looks, race, build are unimportant (we will shape and define you). You will become our property, to do with as we see fit. We will expect you to commit yourself totally, both mentally and physically, into our care. This is not a one-night stand or a summer vacation. This is a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week lifestyle. You must be able and willing to surrender to a life of total servitude and ownership. We are 31 & 38, established professionals. You must be able to rise above your established place in life when needed. The rest is up to you. Send an in-depth detailed application stating your qualifications, abilities, desires and a recent, revealing photo with your phone number and best time to call to: B&R, 15840 Ventura Blvd., #326, Encino, CA 91436. ### LEATHER UNIFORM MASTER

49, 6'1", trim, clean shaven disciplinarian will inspect men for duty who understand the meaning and value of discipline over indulgence, obedience over arrogance, ready to bare ass and bend their back out of strength not weakness, and who recognize corporal punishment as a time tested but often denied ritual of manhood to insure and reinforce proper attitude and behavior. Box 4781

ARE YOU OVER 60?

White male needs older male (60+) who is masculine and has experience. I am 34, healthy, in good physical shape, an eager, willing learner and I am considered very good-looking. Am not a complete novice, rather prefer a person who understands his own enjoyments and can move things, maturely in this direction. I've been told (on several occasions) that my French abilities are absolutely incredible ("the best ever"). And as this was always by someone with many years of experience, this may be particularly meaningful. In addition, I have had a bit of experience around bondage and discipline. But your preferences are foremost and I would expect to adapt myself to your pleasures.

If it wouldn't be a turn-off to you, a recent picture or pictures of you would be much valued... either the regular type, revealing, in action, whatever. Grey or white hair is a definite plus. For the person who fits these images, I would very much want to bring pleasure, that is, to satisfy him in every way. I live in NY now, am in NYC almost daily and I travel outside NY on a regular basis (Midwest and Fla. at present). Relocation could be arranged if a full-time situation turned out to be desirable to you. Please write soon? Box 5105LF

Love going barefoot on dirty city streets, in stores, bars, gyms, etc. Also barefoot and barechested in old jeans or cutoffs. If this lifestyle is you, then contact this very hot, goodlooking, naturally masculine BB, who is W, 5'10", 172 lbs. of muscle, straight in looks and attitude, uninhibited, and hung like a horse. ## VIDEO

NEEDLES AND PINS

Critics not only dish out—they take it, too. And it came, recently, from author Ethan Mordden, who fumed at the gay press for allowing inexperienced, insensitive, failed artists to name themselves critics and decimate with supposedly witty but actually jealous opinions the work of writers far their superiors. To demonstrate their bogus, low-level credentials, Mordden commented with archly raised eyebrow that these self-appointed arbiters of taste had gone so far as to elevate porno to a cinematic art form worthy of serious criticism and discussion. Imagine!

Thus chastened, I feel I'd best skip my usual informative, probing and/or entertaining introduction in which I explore the ramifications, intent, and/or qualifications of the self-appointed pornographer, and just get right to it.

Although I'm one of the writers who first treated porn as if it were (or could be) cinema, I don't offer the following news in self-defense. But as you can see from T.R. Witomski's in-depth discussion in the Drummedia Book section of this issue, others are getting to it, too, one writer in particular disproving the notion that porn is beneath critical evaluation and comment.

I'll admit I'm out of my league and inexperienced when it comes to body piercing and tattooing. But I'm not insensitive—I winced repeatedly while viewing Erotic Tattooing and Body Piercing, and I appreciated the beauty, skill and rarity of the piercing and tattooing demonstrated and discussed in it. But if I skim the surface in understanding the dynamic and psychosexual urge behind either phenomenon, I can at least offer reportage on the contents, and judge the quality of the video which purports to deal with these subjects at greater depth.

Ready? Its quality is poor and its depth is shallow.

This one-hour video from Flash Productions documents the cocktail party/seminar congregation of piercing and tattooing fans preceeding a lecture demonstration by Jim Ward, the creator and publisher of PFI Quarterly, and the country's most visible proponent of the dual interests. We are not told where, when or why the event took place, and the video maker, who I believe doubles as interviewer, further weakens its credibility by treating those in attendance with condescension and unending sexual innuendo. Whatever value judgements you may make on these people—and they are a picturesque lot—they convened with a mutual seriousness of their interest and hardly deserve the juvenile badgering of the interviewer. They do not deny the sexual side of their interest, but they clearly are not present to relate risque tales or flaunt hard-ons. They evade the come-on questions skillfully and informatively. One woman, the ebullient Crystal Joy, halts the prying of her questioner by admitting, "Anything that has to do with the body has to do with sexiness," before putting him in his place and attempting to turn the conversation to less scurrilous matters by instructing, "There's a history to each of these things."

We do get some of this and the traditions of piercing and tattooing, but piecemeal, for the indefatigable interviewer is soon pressing for tales of a man's arousal during the process of having his body decorated. The answer is evasive. "The body piercing is erotic," is his noncommittal answer, "and that led me to tattoos."

The interrogator wants specifics on the erotic side, and the hapless subject rhetorically replies, "Why do you get a hard-on? Who knows?" He then arrives at the simple heart of why some people get into piercing and tattooing. "You learn they increase your pleasure."

Despite the insipid interviews, this video will offer a good deal of pleasure to fans of body decorations, for it collects what seem like hundreds of illustrations of body piercing and tattooing, an amazing pictorial anthology. The color reproduction is excellent, and the range covered seemingly exhaustive. The people present reveal their decorations, and slides roam the world. African tribes, the amazingly excessive bodily distensions practiced in New Guinea, and the wondrous contemporary American work which assimilates artistic influences from around the world into what is called New Work Tattoo are all clearly documented on this video and form its chief attraction.

The subjects and their bodies are by turns sassy, sexy, serious and scary. Padlocks and rings through the labia minor and major are hardly a preparation for the stretched labia of one woman, pulled to four-inch length and then tied in a knot! But why not? The labia is similar to foreskin, and equally, if not more sensitive.

Moving on, there are pictures demonstrating a clitoral piercing and several different methods of piercing the penis. There are examinations of the African practice of stretching pierced holes to enormous size, and a scary picture of a stretched lip without the plate that normally gives it form.

The range of tattooing is similarly broad, from the prevailing punkish juvenalia of death's heads and glowering cave men to incredibly delicate and beautiful one-of-a-kind art work.

Several experts offer brief discussions of how piercing feels, both during the initial pierce and later in use as a stimulant. One woman relates her use of piercing to escape the traditional things women are taught to do, while others stress body decoration as a ritual, in which the image is as meaningful as its application.

After much meandering talk, from which the better tidbits must be gleaned, we arrive at the heart of the video,

Jim Ward's lecture demonstration. Once again, his slides are a worthwhile collection—I know of no other place than this video where so many images have been exhibited at once—but his talk is somewhat rambling and repetitious, though informative on the whole. He lists the historical origins and reasons for the pierces demonstrated, offers and explains the various types of pierces, from acupuncture ("It doesn't have a lot to do with body art") to ceremonial rites of passage, to the purely sexual, and lightly discusses various motivations in our society.

All of this must be listened to and observed through a background din of cocktail chatter, clattering dishwear, and even a motorcycle revving up for the longest time before roaring off. It's the worst conditions for Ward's intriguing show, which, after all, could easily have been taped away from all the distractions. The definite attractions of the tape—the rarity of information, its collection of visuals, and not least of all, the communal strength experienced within this gathering of often ostracized and misunderstood people—are offset by the usual distractions of cinema verite and uncaring production. Ward, who gave permission for the event to be taped, is reportedly unsatisfied with the results, and although there is a good deal of interest here to piercing and tattooing fans, they must endure numerous indignities to reap the video's rewards.

Although a good and necessary addition to the video catalog, we can only hope for a more serious and carefully produced tape to do Ward and his disciples fuller justice. This video does, however, offer addresses and sources of information to help those interested plug into the network. Finally it has an effectively sensuous theme song, written and performed by Michael Bitterman. Indicative of the entire video, though, may be the fact that this is the only credit listed.

BOOKS

BEYOND THE VALLEY OF THE MEESE COMMISSION

John W. Rowberry and the eight anonymous men who contributed to AI's 1986 Male Video Guide are to be congratulated on their stamina. Rowberry in particular must be made of much sterner stuff than I; his Gay Video: A Guide to Erotica offers brief comments on—according to the backcover blurb—"over 800 titles." I didn't actually count the entries, but I think it's fairly safe to say that Rowberry's dedication to smut is prodigious and virtually without equal. I like dirty movies as much as the next nasty faggot, and I'm quite fond of sado-masochistic endeavors, but watching hundreds and hundreds of hours worth of fuck films is a task way, way beyond my abilities. Rowberry and AI's group are a credit to voyeurs everywhere: they saw what I fast-forwarded. A horrible job, but somebody had to do it. Better them than me.

For sheer obsessiveness (always a great virtue) AI's 1986 Male Video Guide—what an awkward title—tops even Gay Video. Unlike Rowberry, the contributor's to AI's Guide eschew all but the most rudimentary comments (e.g., "Good Focus, Exc. Sound, Good Color, Exc. Action"); what they offer instead are rather cold, distant abstracts of 511 porno film/videos. (All the works mentioned in AI's Guide were viewed on video—Rowberry seems to have gotten out of the house once in a while, but many of these productions, especially those more than a few years old, were originally shot on film and then transferred to video. The current trend is to shoot on video, and as home viewing continues to eclipse theatrical viewing as the preferred method for seeing porno, the porn film faces extinction. Because video is a technically cruder medium than film, but the one increasingly favored by producers because it's cheaper and easier to record on than film, most live-to-tape videos can't compare with quality of such classic gay porn films as Arthur J. Bressan Jr.'s Pleasure Beach, Joe Gage's trilogy Kansas City Trucking Co., El Paso Wrecking Corp., and L.A. Tool and Die, Fred Halstead's Sextool, oddly not mentioned in AI's Guide, and Michael Zen's Falconhead. And since the quality of film-to-video transfers is extremely variable, there's no easy way to know if a particular film-on-video is merely a technical mess or a victim of poor transfer. Live-to-tape videos suffer less outside interference—though some, like the videos of Christopher Rage, one of the only gay porn directors who cares at all about the artistic potential of video, are cut by distributors—but they are almost all hemmed in by the limitations of the medium. AI's Guide very usefully lets us know whether a particular work was shot live-on-tape or transferred from film to video. It's only slightly facile to say that films on video work better as movies and that live-to-tape videos are more successful as small-screen porn. A film like Centurians of Rome looks dead on television, but Arch Brown's Rough Idea, which is nowhere near as ambitious as Centurians of Rome, was filmed on video and shines on the home screen.

AI's Guide, oddly enough, simultaneously tells us everything and nothing about its entries. We learn, for example that Knockout! (a title I selected at random) was made in 1983, runs 90 minutes, was shot on film, produced and directed by Kenneth Holloway for Pan Pacific Studios, has "Fair Focus, Fair Sound, Fair Color, Good Action, Sound Sync" and stars Johnny Dawes, Eric Stryker, Andrew Ryan, Broderick Sterling, who are in the "20-30, 30-40" age range and "Well built, Swimmer's body, Macho, Bodybuilder, Hairless, Hairy Well endowed, Cut" and "Blond, WASP, Swarthy, Black, Black & White." The scenes occur in "Bedroom, Bar, Gym, Shower, Backroom Bar, Office/Dressing Rm," and the action consists of "Some Solo JO, Much Boxing, Little Rubbing, Some Kissing, Much Sucking, Much Fucking, Some 3-Ways, Some Orgy, Some Rimming, Little Slapping, Little Tit Play, Little Dildoing." The music is "Soft Rock." The story line: "Ex-champ boxing champ trains new champ and they become lovers." The synopsis: "1) Champ-to-be and sparring partner train, then suck in ring. 2) Manager interviews prospective boxer: kissing, sucking, rimming. 3) Champ-to-be, manager and partner move to shower. 4) Manager interviews another boxer: kissing, sucking, rimming. 5) Two boxers spar, seen by black boxer. In locker room the 2 suck and fuck as black JOs. 6) 2 chorus boys and boxer: dildoes, suck & fuck. 7) Champ-to-be and trainer: suck and titplay. 8) Manager JO's with boxing glove. 9) Victory orgy!" As extensive as that summary is, I really don't know if I'd get turned on by Knockout! or whether Knockout! is in any way significant or how Knockout! compares with the other 510 works in AI's Guide.

In contrast, Rowberry sums up Knockout! as "Great idea gone sour. Boxing motif works some of the time, but long uneventful sex scenes predominate" and give it no stars—"don't bother." (Rowberry helpfully rates the videos from no to three stars.) Unlike the contributors to AI's Guide, Rowberry, a former editor of Drummer and currently the editor of Inches and Studflix, who has written and directed several erotic videos himself, brings a historical overview, a critical understanding, a

TWO FOR THE MONEY: The Color of Money, with the seasoned charm of Paul Newman and the cocky sexuality of Tom Cruise, will hustle your heart.

TWO COCKS AND THEIR BALLS

The Color of Money is an even better but less sexual movie about a man inserting himself in between a heterosexual couple. In a marvelous film season loaded with roles for mature leading men, Paul Newman proves to be the daddy of them all. Whatever twists the script takes, as an actor he shows Tom Cruise who the master is at all times.

As Fast Eddie Felson, the character he created in Robert Rossen's The Hustler, Newman is doing okay at the beginning of the picture, coasting on his charm but getting no excitement out of life. That changes when he meets Cruise, a green kid who shoots pool as well as Eddie, who's kept his hands off his stick for 25 years, ever did.

To this point Tom's girlfriend, Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, has been the brains of the operation. She's smart enough to know Newman can do more for them—"If you're the best at anything, rich can be arranged."

Newman tries to teach Cruise his old tricks, but the young hotshot gets really cocky and challenges his mentor: "Let's see some heavy legend action around here." (Cruise should talk, Legend having been the lone flop among his three films this year.) Cruise goes off on his own and Newman takes up the game again, leading to their inevitable confrontation in a tournament. The ending avoids cliches but is basically unsatisfying. (This isn't the month for good endings.)

However much time you've spent around pool tables you haven't seen them from some of the angles you'll see in The Color of Money. I can't believe some critics have found the pool scenes boring. (As if it weren't enough just to watch the stars caressing those phallic cues...)

Director Martin Scorsese excels at plunging us into macho worlds (Raging Bull, Taxi Driver), but here his combination of atmosphere and sensitivity adds up to some of his best work yet. Newman, too, is at the top of his form. How about "Hud II" next?

depth of perception to the material's he's writing about. He doesn't isolate his entries, but sees how they relate to each other and to the history of pornography. Though Rowberry's critical judgment miscues here and there (he has a fondness for the pretentious, for smut that thinks of itself as art and isn't, and so he raves about Bresson's pedestrian, artsy, unerotic Passing Strangers and Tom DeSimone's overwrought, rather silly The Idol, and can't help being a bit jaded, missing the boat on the passionately involving Men of the Midway, giving it no stars while admitting the first fifteen minutes is "one of the great sequences in gayporn"), Gay Video is an instant classic, an indispensable reference book (names and addresses of the videos' distributors are provided, a glaring omission in Al's Guide), and as valid a work of gay social history as (and much more fun than) James M. Saslow's Ganymede in the Renaissance: Homosexuality in Art and Society.

You can have a good time going through these books in tandem, noting their many disagreements about performers, dates, running times, and the quality of the sex scenes. Rowberry finds the 90-minute The Brig to have "routine sex, unremarkable performers, average production values" while Al's Guide says The Brig runs 60 minutes and has "Exc. Focus, Good Sound, Exc. Color, and Exc. Action." Some productions that Rowberry is very enthusiastic about—Dream Boys, Fisting Ballet, Five Hard Pieces, Foreskin Fantasy—aren't even mentioned in Al's Guide, which goes in mad detail about some poor quality videos—Adventures of Mark Noll, Boys of Holland, California's Golden Boys, Desires of the Devil—that Rowberry may have found pointless to include in his book. In most cases, after you say a porn film is lousy, there's not much else you can say about it.

Al's Guide is a Consumer Reports for gay video porn; that's no mean achievement, and the cross-indexing is amazing. Want to know fifteen of Rydar Hanson's appearances? How about sixteen films produced by Terry LeGrand? Into slapping? Al's Guide will direct you to fifty-five films with slapping scenes. Like sex in alleys? Seventeen films fill the bill. And if guys with swimmers' builds are your thing, a whopping 179 films fall into that category.

The dispassionate descriptions in Al's Guide resemble some of the descriptions of pornographic works by the Meese Commission; by reducing the videos to sex acts, largely ignoring even basic cinematic concepts as montage and mise-en-scene, Al's Guide makes the videos seem to be simply collections of sex acts. Very few pornographic works are art, of course, but all are political expressions by their makers. By trying to avoid taking a stand on any of the videos, Al's Guide fails to allow any seriousness to be attached to the works under discussion.

Rowberry's Gay Video isn't the definitive work on the subject, but I suspect he'd likely be the person to write such a book. His quirky tastes provide for some immensely entertaining reading. Rowberry sees pornography as liberating, as cathartic, as politically important. Though he's less successful when he looks at nonerotic films, getting the plot for Sunday, Bloody Sunday wrong and calling Fassbinder's impossible-to-sit-through Berlin Alexanderplatz "unquestionably the epitome of modern filmmaking," Rowberry's unabashed delight in good, hot material is refreshing. No apologist, Rowberry's verve and slick, sex-positive writing makes Gay Video: A Guide to Erotica the perfect antidote to the turgid, hateful homophobic ramblings of the Meese Commission.

FUN WITH DICKS AND JANE

If you're born to be pussy-whipped, it doesn't matter whether a man or a woman does it to you. That would be the moral of Bertrand Blier's Menage—if it had any morals.

This off-beat French laugh-fest begins with Antoine (Michel Blanc) happily being made miserable by his wife Monique (Miou-Miou). They are observed in a club by Bob (Gerard Depardieu), a thief who takes more than a liking to Antoine for reasons not immediately apparent, unless it's his "spaniel eyes."

It takes Bob about half the picture to get Antoine where he wants him, and no sooner does he succeed than he tries to sell Antoine's ass to another man. So much for sentiment. Monique doesn't object until she realizes Antoine prefers Bob to her: "Getting it up the ass isn't serious, but getting to like it is."

From there on the three-way relationship undergoes some rapid changes. Bob promises to make Antoine "a princess" but makes him a drag queen instead. He bumps Monique out of the picture and assumes the position she had in the beginning.

Had Blier been content to stop there, Menage would have been complete, a beautifully made and excellently acted comedy. Unfortunately, he's tacked on an epilogue, set four years later, that is inconsistent with what has gone before. Leave Menage five minutes early and you'll leave happier than if you stay to the bitter end.

NOTES ON CUFFS

Yet another male/male/female triangle develops—albeit not very far—in Something Wild. It begins as a '30s-style madcap comedy, except that Melanie Griffith is outright criminal, not just frivolous. She kidnaps stuffed-suit tax consultant Jeff Daniels and handcuffs him to a motel bed for some of the wildest sex that's been had in New Jersey since Springsteen left.

Daniels gets into it, and doesn't mind Griffith leaving the cuffs on until she takes him home to mother, then to her high school's ten-year reunion. That's where things turn dark with the arrival of Griffith's husband, Ray Liotta, a superbly menacing presence who soap operaddicts will remember as Joey in Another World.

While trying to get his wife back, Liotta strikes up a tentanow you're wondering, doesn't that sonofabitch ever like a movie all the way through? That's why I saved the best for last.

"You must think that I'm some kind of gay blade," Lou Reed sang, "but, baby, you're so vicious." Reed was a major influence on England's punk one wears black leather jackets. Nancy tries on some of Sid's mother's clothes and screams, "I look like fuckin' Stevie Nicks!"

Eventually drugs become the center of their lives. Nancy's interference helps break up the Sex Pistols, although the final split comes during their American tour while she's back in England. From then on it's a rapid downhill slide. Nancy tries to push Sid into a solo career, but they spend less and less time outside their Chelsea hotel room, where Nancy ultimately dies of a knife wound. Sid lives a few more weeks before OD'ing.

You're probably thinking Sid and Nancy sounds like a major downer, something you would only see if you were trying to induce a manic depressive mood. Not so. That's why this is such a special movie. Director and cowriter Alex Cox (Repo Man) has packed the picture with surprising bursts of comedy and other distancing devices.

Linda and her clients supply some comic relief. In one scene she has a man hanging from the ceiling and instructs a visitor, "Just abuse him now and again and he'll be good as gold." Later she's whipping another customer: "You've been a naughty, naughty newsreader."

Cox manages a difficult balancing act, keeping you entertained without trivializing the waste of lives you're witnessing; never glamorizing drug use though sometimes playing its effects for laughs, but not preaching against it either; making you care about two noncontributing members of society but not so much that you're heartbroken by their deaths—you'll be moved, but probably not to tears. A fantasy sequence that might be called "The Last Pizza" ends things on the most upbeat note possible.

Sid and Nancy does just about everything a movie can do, and does it all well. That doesn't mean it will appeal to everyone, but those who can't appreciate it will miss out on a major entertainment experience.

WILD RIDE: Ray Liotta combines sex and violence superbly in Jonathan Demme's Something Wild.

tive friendship with Daniels. Each man is pleasantly surprised on some level that the other would associate with him, according to director Jonathan Demme, who told Drummer, "Ray was locked into that kind of unique American macho male arrest in his teens, and hasn't grown out of it." Ray believes in the kind of senseless violence Demme loathes but has structured his film's climax around, trying not to glorify it.

Directors John Sayles and John Waters were enlisted for bit parts. Waters plays a used car salesman just after Sayles, as a cop, asks Griffith, "You interested in motorcycles?" and she replies, "No, I just like big things between my legs."

Something Wild takes you on a wild ride through frequently unexpected territory; but yet again I was displeased with the final destination. By movement, of which Sid Vicious and the Sex Pistols were among the brightest, briefest lights.

In Sid and Nancy it's the girl who comes between two men. Sid (Gary Oldman) and Johnny Rotten (Drew Schofield) are good buddies as well as bandmates. "You two got married?" guesses their friend Linda (Ann Lambton), a dominatrix, when they come to visit. They didn't, but a moment later they're playing grabass on her couch, to the amusement of Nancy Spungen (Chloe Webb), an American groupie who's not instantly drawn to Sid.

Drugs bring them together. Sex comes later, and only occasionally when they're not too fucked up to fuck. Sid still wears his favorite T-shirt, with a familiar drawing of two leathermen groping each other, and just about every-

Recently, I have been getting a lot of mail from behind the walls from convicts who want to run their personal ads in Drummer. It's been a few years since I stopped running that column under the name of Jay Bates. The reason I had to stop the column was the number of complaints that came in from guys who had been ripped off by cons. Admittedly, there were a few letters from guys who had found their lifemates through the column, but the complaints outweighed the benefits. As I said, the column stopped about three years ago, so old Drummer issues must be getting inside. I can certainly empathize with the guys inside, because I was there once.

Issue VII, Vol. 3, of the Copperstate Leather Update, put out by THE COPPERSTATE LEATHERMEN of Phoenix, has a piece by Baby Bear, entitled, "A Boy's View." Baby Bear writes intelligently and with a real feeling for his subject. He says that a boy can be a thinking person who is capable of responsibility and still fulfill his daddy's needs. His point is well taken, but I have always felt that boys, like their daddies, are a pretty mixed bag, some are bright and some just make you wonder. Baby Bear: Your daddy has to be proud of you.

The INTER-CLUB FUND of San Francisco is a nonprofit philanthropic group of motorcycle club members. This year's major fund raiser is a holiday gala entitled "Folsom Follies," at the California Club, 1750 Clay St. on Saturday, December 13 at 6 P.M. Thirteen northern California clubs are represented in this annual event. Tickets are $10.00. Questions? Call (415) 668-3115, or write ICF, PO Box 1862, San Francisco, CA 94101-1862.

HOMOPHOBIC UPDATE: The Roman Catholic Church has unfailingly shown its lack of understanding and repeated its unchristian stance vis-a-vis homosexuality. On social issues the Church is living in another age. Jesus Christ, I fear, would not fare well at their hand. A crucifixion in St. Peter's Square might be the order of the day if He returned. A letter in the San Francisco Chronicle says it best to my mind: "Editor—This is great. A guy who dresses in truly garish gowns, calls himself divine, never has sex, and supports himself on the blood, sweat and backs of the poor, calls homosexuals disordered, self-indulgent and morally evil." Could the election of this pontiff indeed be the final conclave?

Closer to home, Edwin Meese, our flaky attorney general, is at it again. One would have thought that the terrible reception to his first pronouncement on the pornography commission would have taught him a lesson. Now, he is trying to scare dealers by making dire threats. For a man who tells people that the Supreme Court of the United States is not the final interpreter of the Constitution, it is obvious that he is willing to trash the First Amendment in order to get his way. When the senate "advised and consented" to his appointment, they showed great short-sightedness. The faint at heart among us will quail in their boots, but most faggots are made of sterner stuff. Just hang in there, Meese will be returning to Oakland, CA in January 1989. Of course, I am not sure that the people in Oakland will really want him.

We are beginning to prepare to start organizing the MR. DRUMMER 1987 contest. This should be the most exciting year since the contest began in 1984. Clubs and bars across the country have expressed interest, so keep your eyes open for the contest in your community. 1988 may see a European entry in the finals in San Francisco.

Incidentally, the owner of that lodge in Tennessee whom I told you about a few issues back is looking for a TOP to live and work at the resort. If you're interested and you can fill his bill, there's a job there for you. Here's a chance to vent your SM drives on a variety of guests. Drop me a line and I will forward your letter.

I have had a couple of inquiries about the continued existence of FFA (Fist Fuckers of America). I understand that they have gone by the board. The most responsible group that I know of in this area of sexual expression is M.A.F.I.A. (Mid America Fists In Action). They have a broad membership and are very much into safe sex. If you would like to contact their national headquarters write: M.A.F.I.A., PO Box 2230, Chicago, IL 60690.

Dick's Bar in Washington, DC, will be the site for the CENTAUR MC's third Mr. Mid-Atlantic Leatherman's Contest January 16, 17 and 18. This will be a weekend celebration of leather. Scott Tucker, International Mr. Leather '86, Patrick Toner, International Mr. Leather '85, Louis Bothwell, Mr. Mid-Atlantic Leather '86, Steve Maidhof, Mr. Washington State Leather '86, and Chuck Smukler, Mr. Colorado Leather '86, will be the judges. If you have any questions about the events, please contact CENTAUR MC, PO Box 362, Arlington, VA 22210. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your response. This event promises to open the New Year with a bang!

SM is a great alternative to banal sexuality. For years practitioners of SM have always preached the need for safe and sane SM. With the advent of the AIDS scourge we have all become aware of safe and sane sexuality. Novices to SM tend to find whipping to be the least awesome of all SM practices. Even this practice can be dangerous if it is not done knowledgeably. Whipping seems to be the basic exercise and often the only exercise for those who do not know how to graduate beyond this particular endeavor. Groups like the Chicago Hellfire Club, GMSMA in New York, the Knights Templar and The 15 Association in San Francisco, and the Disciples of DeSade in Dallas have held seminars which have done much toward expanding the SM experience for many men while emphasizing safety and sanity in SM and sex. If there are other groups out there who hold these types of seminars, I would appreciate knowing who you are. If you give me permission, I will publish your names and addresses so those in your community who might be interested will be able to find you. Ever since the AIDS crisis hit us, I have felt that SM would come into its own, even among the skeptics, since it offers a needed outlet for male interplay, whereby each person can get off mentally without even having to have overt sex.

Until next time. Keep the faith!

EUROPEAN LEATHER NOTES

The European leather scene has always been of interest to the Drummer reader but has in the past not received the coverage due it. Many of the problems with reporting on Europe have been overcome and it is our intent to make "European Leather Notes" a permanent feature of the Leather Bulletin Board. Americans traveling to Europe want to know where, when and how, unfortunately few of us get advance notice of leather events outside this country, so it will be up to those of you who live in or visit Europe to keep us informed as to upcoming club, bar and leather events. Preferably send the information at least two months in advance (quite often the material is too late for our publishing dates and is outdated for use in the next issue—so send us a notice or press release as quickly as possible). This section may go through changes in the next few issues, but bear with us, send your information and suggestions, and let's bring the worldwide leather community closer.

Tom of Virginia has been touring Germany for several months and kept us informed on where to go as well as an American viewpoint of some of Germany's biggest leather events. Tom's suggestions for hot spots in Munich are OCH-

SENGARTEN, a leather bar and from his observations one of the most active (in all senses of the word); THE EAGLE, and ZUM LOHENGREN. Munich also has a Western bar, the BOLT, which is of interest to those who want to see how Germans perceive the American cowboy. Munich has an assortment of fine leather shops. One of the largest and best known is WALTER'S LEATHER BOUTIQUE; others include ATELIER 6, BUDDY, and FOLLOW ME. Tom also recommends that you take the time to try the FISHERMAN'S SAUNA CLUB for relaxation and good clean fun.

Koln, or as Americans call it, Cologne, is among one of the oldest cities in Germany, dating back to pre-Roman times and the sight of the 1986 INTERNATIONAL LEATHER MEETING hosted by the MS Panthers of Koln. The suggested hotel is the Heinzelmännchen, located central to all the leather bars, which include one of the three oldest leather bars in Germany; the PLATZJABBECK (loosely translated "The Last Hangman"), the other two are the Ochsen-garten in Munich and KNOLLE in Berlin. Beside the Platzjabbeck there are three other leather bars of interest in Koln: TRAFFIC, CHAPS and COLONY.

1986 INTERNATIONAL LEATHER MEETING hosted by the MS Panthers of Koln.

Munich's OCHSENGARTEN leather bar.

CHAPS at 24 Woltmannstrasse, Hamburg.

Europe's biggest leather party and the MR. EUROPE CONTEST are held in August of each year in Hamburg and hosted by the MSC Hamburg. Hamburg is Germany's largest port city and home of MSC Hamburg, MC Nordlicht and Gruppe Leder und S/M (GLSM) and boasts one of the largest populations of leathermen in Europe. The most popular bars are BLACK, CHAPS, DOWN (formerly known as Tom's Saloon and contains wall-to-wall, lifesize Tom of Finland drawings), and Image. The ADLER, Eagle in English, is Tom's recommended hotel in Hamburg. Mr. Chaps Leatherworks is the major leather shop in Hamburg and for several reasons should not be missed. The catalog found at Mr. Chaps is not the standard variety; it is on videotape and shows not only fine leather wear but many of their toys in use.

Further notes: THE BOOTS in Antwerp, Belgium is being billed as the "Mineshaft of Europe"; not a bad idea since it has a full four floors which contain three bars, a cellar, a labyrinth, a shower room and a leather shop. The membership and drink price is nominal by American standards and there are special prices for Interchain, ECMC, BBC and Spartacus Club members.

Word has it that the new all-male bordello at Amstel 140 in Amsterdam has found a new way of marketing the world's oldest profession. This time the sex is a la carte! That's according to the Best Guide an information newsletter and visitors' guide. For information about the leather scene in Amsterdam, we suggest you write to them at Postbox 12731, NL 1100 AS, Amsterdam, The Netherlands. If you visit the bordello, let us know just how good the service is!

If you are planning a trip to Europe don't forget the true excitement to be found in the northern countries. SLM-Stockholm, Box 9239, S-102 73, Stockholm, Sweden, will celebrate the New Year with a party at their club room in Old Town January 3, followed January 31 with their SLM private party. SLM-Kobenhavn will have a special SM Night party

Poster from the MR. EUROPE CONTEST, hosted by the MSC Hamburg.

THE BOOTS in Antwerp, Belgium.

Master and slave at BALTIC BATTLE, Denmark.

January 17, and February 7 is the club birthday party. SLM-Kobenhavn's mailing address is Schacksgade 9, DK-1365 Kobenhavn, Denmark. If you have interest in attending these functions or the BALTIC

BATTLE, June 5-8, 1987 (This is similar to Chicago Hellfire's Inferno), it is suggested that you write well in advance for information.

If any portion of Europe is in your itinerary, remember that English is the dominant language, especially among the leather community. You should have few problems if you plan your trip well in advance.

A HOOD-IN?

Recently in the S.F. Eagle, a hooded, leather-clad customer was asked to remove the hood and identify himself by the management when a distressed patron complained. Word quickly spread to the leather community, and a week later twenty-six leathersmen, all wearing hoods, entered, ordered drinks and socialized. Terry Thompson, manager, was quick to recover his initial surprise and welcomed the group. Photo by Mr. Marcus.

THE NOSES KNOW

Armpits produce the strongest body odors. Before testing the efficacy of an underarm deodorant, Thelma Williams, foreground, and her fellow odor judges at a Cincinnati research company sniff the natural odor of paid volunteers. Proving once again that it is possible to enjoy your job. Photo: National Geographic Society.

A STUNNING GIFT

The Sportman's Guide Inc. has advertised a stun gun, said to "immobilize any attacker no matter what his size. Just touch the assailant with this gun, press the button, and he'll fall to the ground, completely disoriented, weak and dazed. And he'll stay that way some minutes afterwards." That part is believable, since the stun gun supposedly puts out 50,000 volts of power! Sounds like a handy home protection device but not recommended for the playroom, unless you know a lot about your partner's physical condition.

TATTOOED, PIERCED AND PROUD

According to Cyclops, the S.F. Tattoo and Piercing Celebration was a great success. Coorganized by Skinhead Steve and the Silver Fox, the event featured piercings by Gauntlet's Jim Ward, tattooing by Phil Payton of San Francisco and Bruce Lee of Phoenix, and an art selection by The Hun from Portland, Oregon and Rex of New York. Fakir Musafar offered one of his inimitable performance pieces. Harold M., the founder of Illustrated Men, the first and only gay men's tattoo club, was cited for "keeping the flame burning." A late-evening, impromptu, butterfly-board demonstration by Fledermaus brought enthusiastic approval from the assemblage. If you would like to attend the next party, write Box 14073, San Francisco, CA 94110.

It started as a barroom bet in 1979 between a swimmer, a biker, and a runner over who was the fittest athlete. Today it is known as the Ironman Triathlon. This year's 1250 participants will swim 2.4 miles in the Kona, Hawaii ocean, immediately pedal 112 miles by bike, and finish with a 24.6 mile run. Worse yet, these hunks compete twice a year—October and February. Serious athletes and serious money, over $100,000 in cash prizes. Think you're tough enough? ### A THANKSGIVING RIPOFF

The S.F. Jacks, a private club, had a unique idea for spicing up their November meeting; it's called "Rip It Off Night." You were warned to wear clothes you no longer wanted and bring something to wear home, because the manic Jacks shredded, shorn and ripped with a zeal seldom experienced since childhood tantrums. Totally unseamly behavior that we hope to experience again. The S.F. Jacks newsletter is available for $6 by writing to 2236 Market St., Box 127, San Francisco, CA 94114.

TROPHY HUNTERS TAKE NOTICE

American Taxidermy, Inc. in Minnesota has produced a pamphlet, "Basic Field Care for Taxidermy Specimens," in which they give the Webster's dictionary definition of "trophy" as "Something gained or given in victory or conquest, especially when preserved or mounted as a memorial," followed by the remark, "If you are proud to have taken it, have it mounted." We definitely agree with Mr. Webster but are reluctant to suggest that our readers carry this suggestion too far.

PASSAGES FROM THE GOOD BOOK

Apparently someone at the Metropolitan Community Church in Washington, DC has been using some of the raunchier ads from Drummer as place markers in hymnals then leaving them there on purpose. Some of the churchgoers found these tidbits of reading material humorous, others did not. Whoever you are, keep up the good work!

You got an item you think is humorous, pointed, sick, perverse or just dumb that you'd like to share with fellow Drummer readers? Send it to TOUGH SHIT, PO Box 11314, San Francisco, CA 94101.

REACH OUT AND TOUCH THE 976 MANN

This may be taking entertainment to a new communications arena. Dial Communications, 304 S. Broadway, Suite 336, Los Angeles, CA 90013, has released a thirty-minute, full-color promotional tape of Larry Mann in a high-tech, multimedia, erotic journal of his daily events. It is somewhat pretentious but expected from a West Hollywood production. Larry Mann is the recorded voice of the phone-sex number (213) 976-MANN, and the video lets you fully appreciate his talents.

SADO PART 3 ISLAND

Story by Mikal Bales, Illustrations by Matt

From before each day's dawn until hours after lights out, Joe Buck was forced to perform a training regimen few men could endure. He drew his strength from the same source he'd depended upon for the last four years.....Morgan Greystar. Joe Buck also knew that no matter how miserable the Academy was making his life, his lot was surely better than Grey's. Each evening the cadets would assemble in the vast Academy gymnasium to witness Joe Buck's physical guerilla conditioning, consisting of calculated beatings at the hands of his training instructors. Joe Buck was ordered to defend himself but the outcome was inevitable. He would be beaten into unconsciousness.

Joe Buck returned to the Academy under strict barrack's arrest. Grey's fate in the penal mines' labyrinthian tunnels weighed heavily on his mind. His rank, privileges and any communication with his comrades, were all revoked. He was the object of contempt and stern discipline. His intensified training, geared to the objective of assassinating Von Sado, was more punishment than instruction. He had already been selected as the best qualified for the assignment. But his criminal status gave license for brutish treatment from his specially assigned and all-too-eager training instructors.

Joe Buck's inner strength and determination grew in direct proportion to the continued and increasing physical abuse he received. His pride in withstanding the punishment and maintaining a reserve for even more special conditioning slowly evolved into an almost perverse pleasure. His body had been honed to the zenith of its perfection and his defiance became a blatant invitation for his tormentors to do their worst. He had sealed off his mind and used his extreme musculature as armor. And as intended, his unflagging resolve in the face of increasingly harsh treatment gave his instructors little satisfaction.

SADO ISLAND is available for $12.50 plus $2 postage and handling from Zeus, PO Box 64250, Los Angeles, CA 90064; and from Sandmutopia Supply Co., PO Box 11314, San Francisco, CA 94101-1314.

From one moment to another, Joe Buck never knew what conditioning brainstorm would next occur to his eagerly sadistic instructors. Frequently, in the middle of the night, with every aching muscle in his body renourishing itself with blessed sleep, his cell door crashed open. Brutal guards dragged the half-sleeping muscled trainee down cold concrete halls. By turns, he was battered with fists, clubs and riding crops, or bound and gagged while instructors slowly butted out their cigars on his nipples and balls. Then, in a Truth cell, under merciless heat lamps, he was tightly restrained in a computerized interrogation unit for hours of further abuse.

It was 1981 and Castro Street was being hailed as the Gay Mecca, the slogan "So many men, so little time" was not an ironic joke, but a statement of joyous freedom, and porn stars from around the world lingered in the warm sun.
